

Deal of a meal

Andrew Garcia, 11 months old, found out he could get a deal of a meal and help third-world relief at the same time. So he showed up at the Salvation Army on Dominion Street last week and was caught by the Midland Times as he took a bite.

New pond helps conserve wildlife

Conservation is in action with the Georgian Bay Hunters and Anglers as their fish pond was officially opened Friday, May 29 by Minister of Natural Resources Vince Kerrio.

After getting a partial grant from the government the Georgian Bay Hunters and Anglers (GBH&A) made way for a pond which will in essence be the tool, of giving back to nature what fishermen take out.

It is full of small pickerel, 125,000, which in a few months will be released in the Georgian Bay waters (Port Severn and Waubesa).

Fish eggs were collected in the Port Severn, North

River area and kept in a hatchery at Pointe Au Baril. When they started to hatch, the eggs were dumped in the pond. Here they will be kept until mid-September when they will be large enough to be transported to open waters. The pond will be drained and the fish collected.

"These are the best dollars we spend, programs that aid conservation in any way," said Kerrio adding that conservation programs like this are a credit to the sportsmen who enjoy fishing. Kerrio says the money generated from the new fishing licence laws will go right back into the conservation of the sport. "It is like having to pay a user fee," he comments.

The pond is being named after Lorne "Smokey" Woods for his dedication to the association.

Loyd Wilson, member, is in care of the fish cultivating.

Kerrio in his closing comments thanked the Georgian Bay Hunters and Anglers and the North Simcoe Anglers and Hunters (who worked in co-operation with the GBH&A) for their efforts in conserving nature. While thanking the fishermen he jokingly asked how he would include the expert women fishers too. Fisher-people was suggested.

If you are interested in seeing fish cultivating stop in and take a look. You're sure to see one.

Whale show June 22

A whale of a tale will be told at the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre from June 22 to August 17.

"Whales - Fragile Giants of the Sea" is an exciting new exhibit on loan from the National Museum of Natural Sciences.

Dominated by an impressive 3 metre long model of a narwhal, the exhibit uses graphics, models, photographs, video, specimens and artifacts to explore the natural history of whales. The feeding habits, mating behaviour, and methods of communication used by these marine giants, as well as the history of their fight for survival, are featured in the exhibit.

"We are very proud to have this remarkable exhibit at Wye Marsh," says Bob Whittam, the centre's executive director. "This is the last chance to view it in Canada until 1988. The whales exhibit is part of our special programs in honour of Wildlife '87 and Environment Week."

Whales have become a potent symbol of the world's endangered wildlife and of our responsibility to the environment. A recent ban on whale hunting has rescued these vulnerable monsters from the edge of extinction. Now, hunting has been replaced by the thrilling new sport of 'whale-watching'.

watchers" use the shape of a whale's blow, dorsal fin and tail flukes to help identify the species and individual creatures they are observing.

Do your 'whale-watching' at the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre. The centre is located just east of Midland on Hwy. 12 and is open daily from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m. For more information, call Wye Marsh at 526-7809.
