

HIGH PERFORMANCE, BROADLY DEFINED

Since people first gathered to test their automobiles Mercedes-Benz has been intimately involved in high performance research. But Mercedes-Benz performance encompasses more than exalted velocities or quick acceleration times. It extends to such critical areas as immensely capable braking, accurate steering and tenacious roadholding: High performance melded with a commitment to occupant well-being. We're your authorized Mercedes-Benz dealer. Visit us today and discover the difference between mere high performance and Mercedes-Benz high performance.

Make sure lights are well adjusted

Like most motorists, you have probably been dazzled by bright headlights from an oncoming vehicle. This is usually because one of the two lights is stronger than the other, the "dims" aren't dim enough or the light beams are maladjusted and shine directly in the eyes of on-coming drivers.

But how do you know if you're not guilty of this yourself? A trip to a service station with a special chart can verify whether or not your lights are adequately adjusted. If not, the angle or luminosity can be corrected in a few minutes.

In the same vein, it is recommended that you get in the habit of regularly cleaning your headlights, especially in winter, when they are most always on.

After all, the greater the odds of being seen, the lower the risk of being in an accident.

Dealership expands sales to skidoos

Doug Sagan and his partner George Woods set up the Used Car Factory in January 1987.

But in fewer than two years, it has already begun to outgrow its name. Besides a good range of used cars offering value for the discerning buyer - currently there are 35 different models available - there are two other strings to the "factory's" bow: boats and Bombardier Skidoos.

The boating season is at its end but the skidoos, which Sagan says are due to be on sale in October, are an exciting new departure.

"We will be carrying a dozen different lines," says Sagan, "as well as providing full parts and servicing facilities." For snowmobiling enthusiasts, that means a whole new ball game in the Huronia area

- new but backed by the solid reputation the business already enjoys among motorists and sailors alike.

And there is more: as of Oct. 1, the Used Car Factory will be carrying a complete range of General Tire products. It will be the first General dealership in Midland and it's a sign of just how far the Barrie-based firm has been revitalized in recent years.

General is now a major force in the retail tire market. After years of hiding its light under a bushel and supplying tires that other companies put their names upon, General is advertising widely and emphasizing the quality and performance of its products. See for yourself at the Used Car Factory.
