

Building together

Bob Bray, president of Midland Buildall, presents a cheque for $4,000 to deputy reeve Pat Armstrong of Port McNicoll toward the community building that will house the Anglers and Hunters, represented by Wayne Simpson. On the left is Marshal Laurin, who drew up the plans for the building.

Anglers, Hunters 'Buildall' in Port

Midland Buildall is a member of a team that helped construct a community building in Port McNicoll's Talbot Park.

Last week Buildall presented a $4,000 cheque to the Port McNicoll council and to the Anglers and Hunters association, who have donated labor for quarters for new change rooms, a youth centre, and its own clubroom.

Buildall owners, the Bray family, are into their third generation in the business, according to Keith Donaldson, Buildall's general manager.

He said, "Because it's a family business, they like to put money back in the community," Donaldson said.

Frank's father started the business, according to Donaldson. Now Frank is owner and his son, Bob, is president.

Things generally came together to start the project. The Anglers and Hunters were looking for quarters to hold functions, and the youth group needed better facilities than the park's change rooms.

Without sacrificing the building's ownership, the village made an arrangement with the Anglers and Hunters that they could have use of the top floor as long as the club was in existence, deputy reeve Pat Armstrong explained.

The Anglers and Hunters put in $5,000 and the labor, Wayne Simpson of the association added. He said the youth group helped out, too.

The club lost no time once it received the go ahead from the town.

"The next day we had the hole dug. By the next weekend the footings were in," Simpson noted.

The members pitched in. "We usually got 20 to 25 people out on a weekend," Simpson recalled.

Buildall was a team member from the beginning. Marshal Laurin, foreman, draftsman and chief estimator for the Midland company, drew plans for less than a third of the normal cost.

Simpson expects the inside work to be done this spring, "not before the baseball season," to be exact.

The Anglers and Hunters are looking forward to a place for their meetings. The group works to preserve the wetlands of Ontario.

The new spot also will serve for suppers, Santa Claus day for the kids, and home base for hayrides, according to Simpson.
