

Orange Association to his readers, as an illustration composed of men banded together for the purpose of screening each other from the punishment of crime, he mentions the fact of a young man named John McNeely an Orangeman, being convicted of perjury at the last assizes in Toronto, and then deliberately states that the verdict was scarcely delivered, when some half dozen petitions were put in circulation by the members of his lodge, praying that the judge might pronounce a light sentence upon him, and continues that even W. M. Button was most active in procuring signatures for one of the petitions, and regrets to say that some were signed by ministers of religion, and magistrates. Now, Sir, that the members of McNeely's lodge put six petitions in circulation on his behalf, or that Mr. Button took a most active part in the matter, is utterly false, as will be clearly seen from facts I am about to relate. Mr. Button being in Toronto when McNeely was convicted, was in company with Christian Reesor, J. P., and John Reesor, then grand juror, when he was requested by a brother-in-law of the unfortunate man to get up a petition, and at the suggestion of Mr. Christian Reesor, it was drawn up by Mr. Gardner J. P. Grand juror in the sitting of the Palmer's Hotel. It was to this effect:— "To His Lordship, Justice Richards; Whereas a young man, John B. McNeely has been found guilty of perjury, your petitioners having been acquainted with the prisoner from his youth believing it to be the first offence, now in behalf of a young wife, of a respectable family, and aged mother, we ask your Lordship to make the penalty as light as possible, signed by Christian Reesor, J. P., W. M. Button, John Reesor, Robert Gardner, J. P., H. P. Crosby, Robert Armstrong, Christian E. Reesor, and Robert Armstrong. The attempts therefore of the Economist to stigmatize the character of any one man, or set of men, though the medium of the press, are now truly applicable to himself. Will any truth telling man say that Orangemen were the Circulators of any petition drawn up on McNeely's behalf? There were only two, one of which was signed by four persons closely related to the Economist. I ask you Sir could judge better, the propriety of a petition, than Mr. John Reesor, a grand juror who heard of the crime, and detained the prisoner. In conclusion, I would say that the ministers of religion do not require the Editor of the Markham Economist to teach them the duty they have to perform towards their fellow men, especially as he seems to have no regard for truth, so let him in future hold his peace.

Yours truly,
VERITAS.

To the Editor of the British Tribune,
Sir: I observe in your last issue that Canada, and especially the Township of York, had given birth to a very promising Poet. You requested your readers to examine to you closely his orthography or style of composition, but to forget all these things in the sublimity of his ideas. Now, Sir, I think that I have got upon the right track of this would-be "Pedagogue" and "Poet." I have traced him from York to Victoria Square, and I think that he may be found within ten miles of that Village at the present time, (of course, "sitting at his official desk"). I am not mistaken, he is the same person who, on calling a meeting of his Trustees, penned the following verbatim note:— "It will please to attend a meeting of Trustees to be held at the School House on Thursday, April 27, 1858, at 4 o'clock a.m.," date March 27, 1858. Your readers will see that his note was written in March; yet they must attend April 1st, and at 4 o'clock a.m. when he intended them to attend at 4 p.m. Yes, and they were requested to attend a meeting of Trustees; and this same person is said to hold a first class certificate. I really think he cannot be the Teacher who was said to be abroad upon the earth,—"once the subject of inspiration—now legislation"—meaning to mingle with statesmen in the Government of the world. If so, in my opinion he cannot be called a Teacher, for the term Teacher is generic, signifying one who conveys knowledge—morals and instructions, which cannot be applied to this Pedagogue.

I have just received a few lines said to have been composed by the above gentleman, on building his name in print.
Dear Sir you know
I now stand almost up so high
As any star in my sky
For fame I fought so hard
But now I'll now could play the card
It hurt me so but I'll try
I sometimes laughed but often cried
But now I've won the day
Your know I have for so you say.

Some envious people no decline
And say my piece from Milton came
But thought like mine no one can eul
Not even though it came from Milton's skull
The piece for weight and worth all fell
'Tis as good as any piece from Steel
And Steel will challenge any London
An error in his work to find
'Tis excellent you know 'tis Sir's
So shut your mouths you envious curs.

And yet this piece is sought for me
And this you very soon will see
For sure I've now begun to write
In fly so high my name
And heeds old nicks in all away
Down to the bottom of the Bay
I will by love give any time
And any man from any clime
And make them cry oh don't do Steel
Leave off and don't me out-right kill.

More anon.
Yours respectfully,
A. PEDAGOGUE.

To the Editor of the British Tribune,
I am really surprised, Mr. Editor, that the people of Richmond Hill, who pretend to hold their heads as high as their neighbors, should allow such a Slough to exist as there is near the White Hart Inn. Were it not for the serious inconvenience which the nuisance occasioned, it would have been quite amusing to see the comical cut some of the pedestrians made, passing to and fro, on the day of the Agricultural fair. Where are our "City Fathers" that they do not see it? If an individual, in moving a building, obstructs or otherwise impedes the passage of a vehicle or foot traveller, is he not amenable for any casualty which might occur?

As an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure? I would suggest that something should be done immediately to ensure safety to life and limb, and the removing of so foul a blot from the centre of our village.
Yours,
A. SCAVENGER.
Richmond Hill, May 29, 1858.

YONGE STREET SPRING SHOW.

On Wednesday, the 26th inst., the Annual Spring Fair of the Yonge Street Agricultural Society was held in this village. The day turned out exceedingly wet and uncomfortable. The whole night previous the clouds sent forth torrents of rain, rendering the roads all but impassable. Serious fears were entertained as to whether any exhibition would take place, as the weather was so extremely unfavorable. However, these doubts were quickly dispelled, as team after team were seen slowly to approach, and there was soon a great number of entries. Indeed, the competition was very great for the different prizes, and the stock shown was of a very superior description.

The Judges, we doubt not, had a very arduous duty to perform, which, we believe, was in all cases performed faithfully, and to the best of their ability; and we think that on the whole the prizes awarded will give general satisfaction. The show of horses we do not remember to have seen equalled in any former year. Several of those who did not obtain prizes were highly recommended. The competition was so spirited as to preclude the possibility of particularizing any one as particularly distinct from the others. We think, however, that special thanks are due to Henry Jennings, G. Miller, Esq., Messrs. Armstrong, Edw. Sanderson, Thos. Martin, and others, for bringing out so many for competition on such a wet day—they coming from a distance, for a few miles was a great distance to come on such unfavorable circumstances.—One of these gentlemen, however, tried to bring more out, but could not get along with them, on account of the roads. Several others also told us it was their intention of exhibiting several more cattle, but they were prevented by the weather. We are decidedly of opinion that Wednesday's exhibition showed the great advance the Society has made, more than that of any former year. The weather was so unfavorable that no one, unless thoroughly interested in the welfare of the county, would come out and watch with thrilling interest the splendid competition in a drenching rain. We doubt not that all the members of the Association were highly gratified with the result of their labors. We observed amongst Agricultural Implements that the Messrs. Patterson and Darling & Aitchison's Machines were the topic of universal praise—they had two fine reaping and mowing machines on the ground, around which there were a concourse of people discussing their various merits, Messrs. Trench & Richmond exhibited Horse Rakes, Straw Cutters and other Ploughs which were much admired. We feel proud of having such enterprising men in our midst. An eulogium on whom was ably passed by the president, G. P. Dickson, Esq., in the evening at the close of the exhibition. The members of the Association dined at the Victory Hotel. After dinner the prizes were read by the Secretary and Treasurer, G. A. Barnard, Esq.—During the evening the most loyal toasts were proposed by the President of the Association, G. P. Dickson, Esq., and drunk with rapturous enthusiasm. A number of other toasts were proposed and drunk in good style, and the meeting broke up at dark.

This number of Entries were far in advance of any former year, and the Premiums increased by over one-third,—this more fully delineating the progress of the Society. There were £12 12s 6d more awarded for prizes this year than last.

The following is a list of the Prizes awarded by the Society:—
