Dim shadows of the hanny past, I sadly miss you now : Visions and dreams that faded fast. Hopes bright, but ah ! too fair to last, Where are ve now?

Scenes, whose remembrance swells my breast And clouds my furrow'd brow, Coming. in sorrow's garments dress'd. To rob the weary heart of rest, Where are ye now?

Dark eyes, before whose me'ling gaze, My heart would vielding bow, Whose glance spoke more than human praise When love approving lent its rays, Where are ye now?

Son hands, which oft I've clasped in mine. When love's low wh's sered you. Told me round my one heart would twine. As round the oak the fair woodbine. Where are ye now?

Dear voices, whose bewitching tone Chain'd ear and heart; ah how Has your once tuneful music grown So silent? Whither has it flown ? Where are ve now ?

And thon, more loved than all the rest Of the beloved, thou The brightest, gayest, loveliest, best, That reign'd within this wither'd breast, Where art thou now?

Gone, where no more life's weary task Can mark the throbbing brow-! Gone, where joy wears no heavy mask; Gone, where love rights. I need not ask. Where art thon now?

Scenes, hopes, friends, loves, of early years-I miss you sadly now-Why have ye fied! and why appears This cold dull cloud of sorrow's tears ? Where are ye now?
