Tread softly here, or pause to breath A prayer for him who sloops beneath, The nameless sand that hides the dead Yet here as wandering Arabs tell, A guardian spirit loves to dwell: 'Tis said such guardian spirits seek The tears on mourning beauty's cheek. And bring those precious drops to lave The sacred pilgrim's secret grave.

Tread softly-though the tempest ble Unheaded o'er his deep repose; Though now the sun's rentless ray Has parched to dust this helpless clay; The spirit in this city enshrined. Once mounted swifter than the wind, Once looked, on sun beyond the ephere And rose above the earth as far As comets pass the nears # star.

Tread softly-'midst the barren sand, Lie relies of a bountoons hand! That hand, if living would have pressed Thee, wanderi. g stranger, to his breast, And filled the cup of gladuess here, Thy dark and drenry path to cheer. Oh, spare this dust for once 'twas part Of an all kind and beauteons heart ! If yet with vital warmth it glowed, On thee its bounty would have flowed. Tread softly-on this sacred mound The badge of Brotherhood is found !
