Poetry.

[For the York Herald. FEW LINES ON THE LOVELY VILLAGE OF RICHMOND HILL.

Awake! my muse, assist my pen While I attempt to write The clustering beautier of that place That met my gazo last night; That levely spot of high renown That is rising fast to fame By noble acts of faith and hope To immortalize its name. The rural scenery of that spot Is great beyond degree;
No spot on which my foot has trod So fine, so fair to me. Upon the summit of that hill Stands beautiful and fair Or houses built for prayer; Between them stands in beauty bright The County Grammar School, In Gothic style and belfry high, So heautiful the whole-Within its walls sweet knowledge dwells Our lovely youths from day to day Receive her blessings there:
Within this far-famed levely spot Are minds expansive great, They adorn the social circle round. Both in the Church and State. The Legislator here is found, The Scholar and the Bard; The miserable miser, too. His case is mighty hard.

A SCOLD CONVERTED. - In the early period of the history of Methodism, some period of the instory of Practicolism, some of Mr. Wesley's opponents, in the excess of their zeal against enthusiasm, took up a whole waggon-load of Methodists, and carried them before a magistrate. When they were asked what these persons had done, there was an awkward silence;

"Well, they pretended to be better than others; and besides, they prayed from morning till night."

The Magistrate asked if they had done asything else.

"Yes, sir," said an old man; "an't, plese your worship, they converted my wife; till she went among them, she had such a tongue, and now she is as quiet as

RAT-TAIL STORIES .- We are assured RAT-YALL STORIES.—We are assured that once, in Scotland, a thrifty laird, finding his store of eggs dminish, watched to see how the theeves could carry them away. He saw three rats go together to away. I have not unrinor on his stories of the saw three three properties of three propertie away. He saw three rats go together to the pile of eggs, when, one turning on his back, the others rolled an egg upon him, which he clasped safel a egg upon him, which he clasped safel to his bosom, and his companions, taking his tail in their mouths, started off like a team drawing a sledge, and disappeared behind some bar which were the outer fortifications o their castle. A Frenchman's oil wasted their castle. A Frenchman's oil wasted the accountably, although the narrow neck of his flask seemed a sufficient security against depredation. By a course of es-pionage like that of the Scotchman, he detected the rats lowering their tails al-ternately into the flash, and drawing them covered with the luscious fluid, which each in turn of scotled to his food to the in turn offered to his friend.
