Moore's Melodies .- Mike Moore is a valiant soldier of the line, at Fort Stula-comb. He became drunk and disorderly, and was sent to the guard-house. While there he was particularly noisy; and Licutenant O'Grady, whose Irish was unquestionable, ordered him to stop his noise, "Och! that I should live to hear an O'Grady call Moore's Melodies a noise."

The Polls and their Prison .- Eighteen miles from Warsaw stands the largest fort-ress in the world—a fortress with case-mated and bom-proof barracks for 40,000 men, and with a circumferance of eleven miles. Giorgievsk. Mr. and Mrs. Dickens .- A London MASONIC QUADRILLE BAND! correspondent writes us as follows ;- " Mr. and Mrs. Dickens have been reconciled and are again living together. Let us trust that we shall hear no more of 'incompatibility.' The fact is that Mr. Dickens is a plain, matter-of-fact, sensible woman, without any literary tastes, and who, possibly, has not read the whole of her husband's novels. It seems to me that this is just the sort of a wife that a litterateur should have, seeing they could not come in one another's way, but Dickens thought otherwise, and sees, I suppose, in the happy relation that exists between Sir Ed vard and Lady Bulwer, a proof of the happiness authoress are united. But Dickens is getting older, and, therefore, wiser, and sees that he will be most happy in the so-cuty of the mother of the family.
