THE TWO BIRDS.

A bright bird lived in a golden cage, So gently tended by groom and page, That a wild bird came her pomp to see, And said, 'I wish I could live like thoo For thou canst sing And plume thy wing,

While dainty fare The wild bird came her pomp to see,

And said, 'I wish 1 could live like thee,'

Then came from the cage a plaintive voice, Which hade the wild bird to rejoice For I'd give my golden cage, said she, Far a humble perch on the wild-wood tree

For thou canst sing On freedom's wing ;

Those bars of gold.

A slave enfold.

*I'd give my golden case,' said sho, Northy humble perch on the wild-wood tree

Then, when the hird of the wild-wood knew The bright one weary of bondago grow.

Me set the plaintive captive free.

Mad'away they flew, singing, ' Liberty!'

In joy they roam Their leafy home. And trill the lay, The live-long day. The lay of love from hearts set free, For love is blest with liberty.
