Literature. Home as it ought to be.

Home! What word can be more sacred and holy? It represents the Eden of our earth, and gives us the purest and sweetest idea of a future existence.

Few, except by experience, can understand a faithful wife's position. Under the happiest and most favourable circumstances it is always trying and responsible.

Her children, naturally, are no less wayward nor less perverse than children in general. But from their earliest infancy, she has striven to eradicate the evil and supplant the good.

Gradually, and by almost imperceptible degrees, the children become participants in the cares and labours, and the joys and sorrows of the household.

A regular and systematic order is maintained, and work and books and play alternate, while neither mind nor body is overtaxed.

How pleasant the contemplation of such a home! And why is it too near a fancy sketch? Are the means and the results not attainable by all? Few, it is to be feared, enter upon life's duties with right views concerning them. Life is not all enjoyment, neither is it all sorrow, but the union of both, rendering it the probationary state to a higher existence.

Happiness is never to be sought as a chief good, but to succeed, as a result of the performance of the duties devolving upon us.

Much of trial and suffering might be avoided if the cost was oftener counted before assuming the duties and the responsibilities of the married life.

Very few of our readers are ignorant of at least one superstition concerning the most popular saint of Catholic Europe; but so few know his history, that we propose giving a brief summary of it here.

Saint Nicholas was the Bishop of Myra, born in Pantheria, in Lycia; died in December, 320. He is the patron saint of sailors, travellers and captives, and the guardian of unmarried girls, and of children.

DAMASCUS.

The most delightful city of the East is Damascus, both to the native and the stranger. Seen from afar, or from the hills which overhang the lovely valley in which it is enclosed, it seems to be entirely unshrouded in the most luxuriant and beautiful foliage.

For many miles the city is surrounded by fertile fields and gardens, which are watered by rivulets and streams, giving to the vegetation a charming freshness and sweetness.

Healthy Habitations.

The coolest part of a room in warm weather, for sleeping, is the floor; but by the operation of the same law of nature, that cool air is heavy, and falls to the surface, the healthiest part of a chamber in very cold weather is the higher.

First. There is more need of ventilating a chamber in winter than in summer.

Second. There is no advantage as to health, in sleeping in a very cold room, cold enough to have ice formed in it during the night.

Third. There is no advantage as to health, in sleeping in a very cold room, cold enough to have ice formed in it during the night.

Fourth. There is no advantage as to health, in sleeping in a very cold room, cold enough to have ice formed in it during the night.

Fifth. There is no advantage as to health, in sleeping in a very cold room, cold enough to have ice formed in it during the night.

Sixth. There is no advantage as to health, in sleeping in a very cold room, cold enough to have ice formed in it during the night.

Seventh. There is no advantage as to health, in sleeping in a very cold room, cold enough to have ice formed in it during the night.

Eighth. There is no advantage as to health, in sleeping in a very cold room, cold enough to have ice formed in it during the night.
