Written for the Herald. THE WITHERED LEAF.

Little leaf from whither cast, Sport of every wanton blast; Drifting hither to and fro Where they like to make you go?

I the little leaf you see, Wasted from the forest tree; There I budded, after grew 'Till I was surpassed by few.

Contributing as the rest .To the forests levliness. When she hath, as she hath now, Beauty's laural on her brow.

But upon a luckless day, Storm with fury swept my way; For a while I firmly clung.

To the bough from which I hung.

But my little stem so frail Could not long withstand the gale, As it rolled in fury past, Bending all before the blast.

So it parted. and that's how, I'm a wanderer from the bough; Drifting hither to an fro, Where the breezes make mc go.

Sad and dreary is your tale Little pilgrim of the vale, But through nature's wide domain. Can you look and then complain.

For though blighted is your form, All like you must feel the storm; And he drifted to and fro Where the fates commandeth go HEBE.

Miscellnneons.

To all men the best friend is virtue; the best companions are high ondeavours and honourable sentiments.

That only can with propriety be styled refinement, which by strengthening the intellect, purifies the manners. We are oftener more cruelly robbed by those who steal into our hearts then by those who break into our houses. In some tranquil and apparently amiable natures, there are often unsuspected and unfathomable depths of resentment. Some of us fret inwardly. The latter is the better plan for our friends, but the worse for ourselves. Friends should be very delicate and careful in administering pity as medicine, when enemics use the same article as poison. He who think he can do without others is mistaken; he who think others cannot do without him is still more mistaken. The tear of a loving girl is like a dew drop on the rose; but that on the cheek of a wife is a drop of poison to her husband. Of all monarchs, Nature is the most just in the enactment of laws, and the most rigerous in punishing the violation of them. Mever retire at night without being wiser than when you rose in the morning, by having learned something useful during the Self-concet is about as uncomfortable seat as a man can have for a steady thing.

Censure is most effectual when mixed with praise. So, when a fault is discover ed, it is well to look up a virtue to bear company.

Bondage of the Passion. The man who violenty hates or ardently loves, cannot avoid being in some degree a slave to the person detested or adored. Nothing is so fragile as though in its infancy-an interruption breaks it; nothing is so powerful, even to overturning of mighty empires, when it reaches maturity.

The creations of fancy are divine. Many a Venus, as beautiful as she who rose from the white toam of the sea, has risin from the black foam of the poet's inkstand.

Men often dread poverty the more the farther they are removed from it; as the more giddy the height to which we have attained. the more frightful yawns the gulf below.
