ROOT-PRUNING .- At what time in the year should fruit trees be pruned at the root, to make them produce fruit, in place of rank growth of foliage, the trees being princi-pally pear-trees? The work may be done in autumn, after the trees have shed their leaves, or early in spring, before the leaves have begun to swell there buds. Should prefer autumn. Dig a trench around the tree, a sufficient distance from the tree. and cut of all the roots with a sharp spade or knife; and then fill in with some welldecayed manure mixed with loam and fill up the trench again. By this process, the lux-uriance of the trees is checked and fruitbuds, are formed. It is a good method to practise especially in small gardens .-- Am. Jonr. of Horticulture
