The Great Cause of Unhappiness Harsh judgment, rough words, small but frequent acts of selfishness and injustice, sometimes quite poison the heart that promised to be healthy, and curse the start that promised to be blessed. 0 There are families that possess every earthly comfort, health, money and occupation, but are miserable from the jealousy and quarrelling that prevail within them. There are married couples who live in daily sorrow, not because they 0 are in want, but because each think the 0 other unkind, arbitrary, and inconsiderate. Young people sometimes marry with their eyes shut; and thus, instead of being mated with angels, as they fool ishly imagine they might be, they find out afterwards that they are only men and women, with the common work-aday weaknesses and faults of their respective sex. This sham love easily gets soured, and then each reproaches the other for not fulfilling the sentimental prospects with which they entered into the marriage state. Take any of the reo lationships of life, and we should find that the greater part of our sorrows o comes from the same cause. Get anyone to tell you honestly what gives hir the most annoyance and disquietude and he will tell you they come from want of kindness, sympathy, and fellow-feeling.

He could tell you that he would bear other things if he only met with more consideration, support and encouragement from the people with whom he has to do.

The Way to Paris

If the Crown Prince of Prussia enters Paris with his army, as he now threatens to do, it will be the third time since the opening of the century that a foreign o army will be seen in the streets of the 1 0 French capital, But Paris, though often menaced, has not been frequently taken. o In 451 it was threatened by Atilla and o his Huns, but the dreadful slaughter of O Chalons-sur-Marne and the interposition o of St. Genevieve saved it. It was again threatened in 732 by the Saracens but was again saved by the great victory won at Tours by Charles Martel, when the tide of Mahommedan conquest from the south was forever stayed by the complete destruction of the infidel host and the death of its leader, Abdel Rahman. In 418 Paris was ravaged by the Northmen; and actacked by the same restless foe unsuccessfully in 815, 855 and 885. In the last named year they were defeated by Count Eudes and Bishop Goslin after having beseiged the city thirteen months. 1 It was occupied by the English in 1418, who retained possession till 1436, Henry IV, having been crowned there King of England and France in 1422. On the 30th of March, 1814 the allies entered Paris; and in the following year, after Waterloo, they again entered it, this time without opposition. It is a little singular that the English or the Prussians have led each successful foreign attack on the French capital during a period of a thousand years.

THERE was, many years ago, a Lazy Man's Society organized in a certain town. One of the articles required that no man belong-0 ing to the society should ever be in a hurry. Should he violate this article, he must stand treat to the other members. Now, it happened, on a time, that the village doctor was o seen driving post-haste through the streets 1 to visit a patient. The members of the so-0 ciety saw him, and chuckled over the idea 0 of a treat; and, on his return, reminded him of his fast driving and violation of the rules. 1 "Not at all," said the doctor. "The truth is, my horse was determined to go, and I felt too lazy to stop him." They didn't catch him that time.

SOFT SOAP .- "Oh, dear! Mr. F., you jest when you say my baby is the handsomest you ever saw; you must be soft-soaping."-Well, madam, I think it needed soap of

..... 2 1 0 some kind."
