Poetry

Scotland Yet. Gae bring my guid auld harp ance mair, Gae bring it free and fast, For I maun sing anither sang Ere a' my glee be past; An' trow ye, as I sing, my lads, The burden o' it shall be— Auld Scotland's hives and Scotland's knowes And Scotland's hills for me; I'll drink a cup to Scotland yet, Wi' a' the honors three!

The heath wags wild upon her hill And foaming through the fells, Her fountain sing of freedom still, As they dash down the dells; For weel I loe the land, my lads, That's gived by the sea— Then Scotland's vales, and Scotland's dales, And Scotland's hills for me; I'll drink a cup to Scotland yet, Wi' a' the honors three!

The thistle wags upon the fields Where Wallace bare his blade, That gave her foemen's dearest blade, To dye her auld grey plaid; And looking to the lift, my lads, He sang this doughty glee— Auld Scotland's right, and Scotland's might, And Scotland's hills for me; I'll drink a cup to Scotland yet, Wi' a' the honors three!

They tell o' lan's wi' brighter skies, Where Wallace's voice ne'er rang; Gie me the lan' where Ossian dwelt, And Colla's minstrel sang— For I've na skill o' lan's, my lads, That kenna be free— Then Scotland's right and Scotland's might And Scotland's hills for me; I'll drink a cup to Scotland yet, Wi' a' the honors three!

Then Scotland's right and Scotland's might And Scotland's hills for me; I'll drink a cup to Scotland yet, Wi' a' the honors three!

Literature.

A Night in the Old Barn on Bear River. 'A regular nor'easter!' said old Sanders. 'We may as well get out of this. 'Twill be colder than Biter by morning!' 'Ugh! No doubt!' exclaimed the 'doctor,' shivering. 'But how far is it down to the settlement, for a guess?' 'O, twenty miles, or thereabout,' replied Sanders, laughing grimly. 'Twenty miles to-night! Confound moose-hunting!' cried the doctor, looking round to the rest of us, who were much of his opinion, as we stood there, with the snow sitting down through the bare forest branches and rattling incessantly on the dried leaves.

'By George!' cried Brown. 'This is tougher than anything I saw in the service! Twenty miles in such a storm as this!' 'No use grumbling; you would come, you know; may as well make the best of it,' said Sanders. 'But we've got a long tramp; so let's be off.'

We were, we judged, somewhere in the town of Grafton, Maine, on the head waters of Bear River, a tributary of the Androscoggin. We had come up the day before, with hounds, after a moose reported to have been seen some miles below. Yesterday had been a beautiful Indian summer day, the last of its race; for winter had now burst down upon us with hail and snow, driven by the cutting northeast wind, which sighed and howled with November dreariness through the leaden forest.

The moose had fared much better than his hunters, for, after leading us off steadily into the wilderness, he had now left us to get back the best way we could in storm and darkness.

Our party consisted of five; the 'doctor,' a young medical student, just out of school and never in the woods before; Brown, a returned cavalry man, my brother Tom and myself, then boys of fifteen, and lastly, Sanders, an old backwoodsman who, in his younger days, had been a river-driver, but latterly a hunter and trapper. 'Twas a queer party, collected rather hastily, to gratify the doctor's ill-timed enthusiasm to hunt a moose. Sanders was the only one possessing the slightest knowledge of woodcraft.

For two or three hours we tramped on steadily, following down the river, and consoling ourselves, as best we might, with the reflection that, provided we didn't get lost, we should get down to some farmhouse by midnight, possibly. It was now past five o'clock, and getting quite dark, when we suddenly noticed that the forest lightened up ahead, and a few moments later we came out into a large opening on the stream, containing a big building of some sort.

'Hurrah!' shouted the doctor; 'there's a house.'

'Not a house, exactly,' said Brown, straining his eyes to reconnoitre. 'I should call that a barn.'

'Hay-farm here, I guess,' said Sanders; where they cut hay for the logging-camps. No house here.'

'No light, anyway,' said Tom. 'Well, then,' cried the doctor, striking out across the clearing, 'in lack of a house, we will try a barn.'

We all followed; any sort of a shelter was a godsend on such a night, and we were soon stumbling round the corner of a great deserted structure of rough boards looming up lonesomely amid the whirling snow, with one of its 'great doors' swinging and banging with dismal slams.

We dodged in, however, and contrived to secure the reckless old door by standing a piece of timber slantingly against it on the outside. There was a large quantity of hay stored within. The scaffolds and mows were filled up to the 'high beams,' and there was also a lot lying loose on the floor.

It wouldn't do to kindle a fire in there, and nobody wanted one enough to build it out in the snow; so we divided the remainder of our 'cold bite' in the dark, and, after eating it, shook down a bed of the hay and turned in side by side, with a beautiful coverlet of the same material.

For a long time we lay talking and congratulating ourselves in our comfortable bunk, till, after a while, first Brown, then the doctor, and soon after Sanders began snoring drowsily, Tom took up the chorus, and I didn't listen much longer.

I don't know how long we had been asleep, when all at once I woke with a jump and in considerable alarm. Something was snuffing and scratching through the hay down at my feet. I was sure I felt claws on my boot. It took me a moment to recollect where I was, and it then flashed into my mind that the doctor was playing off another of his jokes (he was always at it) to frighten me.

The scratching and rustling continued, working up nearer; but I waited for a good chance. 'I'll fix you, old fellow,' thought I, and lay motionless till I felt what I took to be his finger nails pinching up my trowser leg; then I kicked out at a venture, hoping to pay him for his untimely antics.

My foot hit something—pretty hard! There was a spit, a growl, and the flash of two fiery eyes in the blackness! In my fright and surprise I executed a rolling leap over Brown, who lay next to me, and landed plump on the doctor. Up jumped the doctor, pitching we down into the hay at his feet. As yet, none had spoken, but the following inquiries instantly broke out in the dark: 'Halloo!' from the doctor.

'What's up?' from Brown. 'Wildcats! Wildcats!' screamed I, scrambling in the hay. 'Halloo!' from old Sanders, waking up. 'What's the matter?' from Tom. 'Catamounts! Wildcats!' I vociferated.

'Here was an instant scuffle! Everybody was on his feet in no time! Gusts of hay flew about! Knowing the creature was on my side, leaped over toward the other, ran against Brown, was taken for the wildcat, and got a knock which sent me sprawling in the hay again. 'Here he is!' yelled Brown. 'Here he is! Out with your knives!' 'Hold on! Don't stab!' I shouted. 'You are wrong, all wrong!' 'Strike a light! Strike a light!' cried Sanders; with 'Open the door! Open the door!' from the doctor.

Everybody ran toward the door to push it open, all together, and actually ran square unto the cat, which had also started for the door. A tornado of spits and snarls arose; the creature bit and dug away right and left, slitting open pant legs, snapping its teeth, and tripping up nearly the whole party in its struggle among our legs. 'The hounds rushed in to complete the uproar, while voices not identified cried all at once: 'Git out!' 'Ste-boy!' 'Git out!' 'Don't strike here!' 'Who you kicking?' 'Avast that knife!' from Sanders. 'For God's sake, keep that gun off my head!' from Brown.

All this, with an instantaneous rush for the other end of the floor; in fact, another blind and unintentional run on the already maddened animal, which had gone there just ahead of us. This time the creature sprang at the doctor full tilt, knocking him against somebody else. Another outrageous panic followed.—Everybody kicked and struggled at random. And amid shouts, barks, growls and spits, the beast got through the crowd somehow, and escaped up the side of the mow.

'Order! Order!' roared Sanders, above the outcry. 'Now just stand still! Stand still everybody, till we get a light.'

Miscellaneous.

You can't marry a miss if you marry a widow. A Cairo lad only ten years old has four inches of whiskers. A Missouri thief has been convicted of stealing fourteen hundred times. South Carolina alone furnished 49,000 soldiers for the Confederate armies. Plenty of people who emigrated from Indiana to Kansas, are returning home. The Parisians prefer cart horse to race horse for the table. Stakes of the latter are too "turf."

Maine has almost exclusive control of the oil trade, and manufacturers are growing rich. The difference between a horse dealer and a horse stealer is not always pronounced one, although it should be. One of the results of France's misfortunes not the least important from a commercial point of view is the transfer of the Suez canal from French to English control. M. de Lesseps, unable to procure in France the money necessary to complete the work, has sought it in England, where a company is to be formed to operate the canal in future. The number of bankrupt peers is starting. The Duke of Newcastle led the way and after him came the Earl of Winchelsea, the Earl of Orkney and Lord de Morley, while an attempt was made, though an unsuccessful one, to include Lord Martin in the list. There must also be added Lord Courtenay, the son and heir of the Earl of Devon, who in due course will inherit the title. Lord de Morley's debts are said to amount to £400,000; the Duke of Newcastle stands indebted to the amount of half a million. These are great scandals.

Good Advice. Whatever your calling, be proud of it. If you are a shoemaker, try to make a better shoe than any other man can make. Yes, whatever your trade or profession, excel in it if you can.

Bear in mind that any kind of honest labor is honorable, but choose well. "In whatever you sweat indulge your taste." If you like the free life and honest labor of a farmer, do not drag out long years in the study of law or medicine, for that would only be "vanity and vexation of spirit;" but go immediately to the farm, and in the life you love enjoy that perfect peace of mind peculiar to every individual that feels he is in his forte, doing what God designed he should, which will never leave to realize that cold, humiliating and sickening feeling that his life has been a failure.

Suffer not that feeling to grow over you, but be up and doing. Look well to the ways of your footsteps. Keep clean the house of clay in which God has placed you. Taste not, touch not that which will corrupt. Go not to your grave a composition, one third whiskey, one-third tobacco, and the remainder corruption, so filthy that even the ghouls and ravenous worms would scorn to touch you.
