Original Poetry.

France, Weep Not.
France, thou'rt wounded, deeply wounded;
Blood flows free from every vein;
In thy blood thy sons are sleeping,
France, thou'rt wounded, but no slain.

On thy fields of bloody battle,
'Gainst thy proud triumphant foe,
Thou art fallen with thy glory—
France, I weep to see thy woe;
Famed of nations, long triumphant,
Thou didst bear the conquering sword;
Nations bowed before thy sceptre,
Nations trembled at thy word.

Why, then, is thy glory fallen,
'Neath thy foeman firm and proud?
Why the roar of German cannon
Sweeps across thy blood-red sod?
In the grave thy bravest slumbers—
Rouse thee from thy death-like sleep;
When thou draw'st the sword for vengeance,
Tears of blood thy foe shall weep.

In their grave thy fathers wonder,
Napoleon yet shall lead thy men;
Then for vengeance, deep and dreadful,
To glory thou shalt march again.
Revering in the fields of slaughter,
On to victory as of yore,
He shall lead thee on triumphant,
O'er the fields of blood and gore.

On thy fields the blood is flowing,
It shall dark and deeper flow,
When thou meetest again in battle,
With thy now triumphant foe.
Then, against her fairest cities,
Thou shalt cast death's darkening shroud;
And thy cannon deeply rolling,
Shake her fearful trembling ground.

Germany! O, proud Germany! tremble—
Full's thy cup of glory now;
For the nation thou hast conquered,
Yet shall tread upon thy brow.
Wounded, France, thy heart is bleeding,
Rest awhile, and then from sleep,
Draw the sword for fearful vengeance,
Make thy foe forever weep.

Truly, France, thou'rt deeply wounded,
Bind thee firm the broken vein;
And thy foeman yet shall feel
Thou art wounded, but not slain.
Tyro.

John Cutt's Secret.
"Is Mr. Cutt in?" asked a gentleman, who having looked at the door, was satisfied to see an open window with, "Well, what's wantin' now?"

"Yes, he's in or about somewhere, I suppose," she replied; "but I'm Mr. Cutt's when any business is to be done. He's Mr. Cutt's eatin' and drinkin'; sleepin', sometimes."

"Well, my good woman," said the gentleman, "I think he will be Mr. Cutt's for my business, too. I wish to see him."

"What do you want of him?" asked the shrew, thrusting her head still further out of the window.
"To do something for me. But I must see him myself," was the reply.

"Is it real business, for pay, or only a favor that you want; I can let your horse have a peck of oats, or I can direct you to the shortest road to the Four Corners, or I can—I can—why I can do anything for you that he could; and a good deal more. I take the money and write the receipts; and pay the men, and I take off the produce! I am as good a judge of stock as he is, and can't be beat on horse flesh."

"But," said the gentleman, drawing down his face solemnly, "you can't take his place now. Find him out for me at once."

The shrew was baffled. "Look-a-here, mister, maybe you don't know the circumstances of the case. This here farm is mine, and it was my father's afore me; and Cutt's he ain't no more claim to it than that hen down there has. And besides I'm seven years older than he is, a foot higher and weigh twenty pounds more! What's your business on my place, if I may make so bold?"

"To see and talk with your husband," replied the gentleman, getting out of his chaise and hitching his horse to a post, as if he meant to stay till he did see him.
"Be you a doctor? 'Cause there ain't a living thing the matter with Cutt's. He's the welllest man in town, and so be I," said this "woman of the times."

"No, my good woman, I'm not a doctor. Do you think your husband will be in soon? Send that boy to find him?" said the stranger.

The boy looked up in his mother's face—but he knew his own interest too well to start without orders.
"Then you're a minister, I suppose, by your black clothes. I may as well tell you and save you time, that we don't go to meeting and don't want to. It ain't no use for you to leave no tracts for nothing—for I've got a big dairy and ain't no time to idle away readin', and I keep him about so early and late, that when he's done work he's glad to go to bed and rest."

"I'm no minister, madam; I wish I was for your sake," said the gentleman. "Send for your husband; I cannot wait much longer. I must see him at once."

The boy started to his feet again, and looked in his mother's eye, but it gave no marching orders.
"Look here, mister," now appearing at the door, and looking defiantly at him; "you're a schoolmaster, huntin' up a strict school, and you think he's a com-mittee man; but he ain't this year."

"No, I'm not a schoolmaster, mister," said the visitor; "though I would not have to look for pupils in need of teaching, if I were."

"Ma'am Cutt's," as the neighbors called her, dropped her hands to her side and heaved a groan. She had found a man she couldn't manage.

"See here, now mister," she said, "I can read a body right through, and I know what you was the blessed minute I clapped my eyes on you. I can tell by your overlatin' arguin' that you are lawyer. We hain't got no quarrels; don't want no deeds drawn or wills made, so if you're huntin' a job of my husband, you may as well unhitch your horse and drive on. We know enough to make a little money, and I know enough to hold on to it."

"My good woman, you entirely misunderstand my errand. I can tell no one but myself what it is, and must tell him in confidence alone. If he chooses he may break it to you the best way he can."

"Oh, my goodness sake alive! Brother Liff's blowed up in the Mississippi boat, I bet. Oh, la me the poor fellow! He left a little something, didn't he?"

"I never heard of him, and nobody is 'blowed up,' that I know of," replied the gentleman.

"I—now I know! You're the man what wants to go to Congress, ha, and have come here huntin' after votes. He shall not vote for you! I hate politicians, especially them that goes agin' women, and thinks they were made to drudge, and nothin' else! I go in for men and women—Scripture says, 'there isn't neither man or woman, but all's one in politics.' I believe the day is comin' when such as you and me will have to bow the knee to women, afore you can get the high places and high pay that's eatin' us up with taxes! You can't see my husband! We are going to the polls on the way to the mill and I'll promise you that he votes right."

"I'm no candidate, and I don't know what you are talking about. Ah! there comes the man I want." The stranger went toward Mr. Cutt's, who had just leaped a pair of bars which led from the potato patch into the lane.

Mrs. Cutt's flew into the house for her sun-bonnet, to follow them; but, by the time she got to the bars, her mysterious visitor and Cutt's were driving rapidly down the road.

The strong-minded woman shouted after her husband, "You'd better come back, I tell you!" but the wind was the wrong way, and carried her words into the potato patch.

"Sir," said the gentleman to honest Cutt's, "I have a very simple question to ask you, but I shall have to ask you in confidence. I will give you five dollars if you will promise not to repeat my words until to-morrow."

"Well, sir," replied Cutt's, "I should not like to answer any questions that would make trouble among my neighbors. I have my hands full, I can tell you, to keep out of scrapes now; but I've done it, and hain't an enemy in the world, as I know."

"But, sir, you needn't reply to my question unless you are perfectly willing," said the stranger.

"Ask your question said," said Cutt's, "and I will not repeat it."

"Well, Mr. Cutt's, I am laying fence on the Brisley place, that I have just bought, and I was directed to inquire of you where I could buy cedar posts. A fellow in the store said, 'Cutt's can tell you, if his wife will let him; but she won't. She'll insist on telling you herself, and perhaps offer to drive you wherever you go to order them.'"

"I told them I would see you and ask you only; and the fellows bet on it. They are to give you ten dollars, and two or three widows in town a cord of wood each, if I succeed in asking you this question alone, and making sure your wife does not know my business until after breakfast to-morrow mornin'."

Cutt's knew his wife's "standing" too well to feel very sensitive, and taking the bill from the stranger, he smiled and said:

"I'll go with you to look out cedar posts and keep dark, for the joke's sake; but I don't know as she'll let me stay in the house to-night; I don't own it myself the good-natured Cutt's."

"Suppose you go to the place and see to setting the posts. I will send a boy to tell her you had to go off suddenly on a little business, and will be back in the mornin'," said the stranger.

"I'll do that," replied Cutt's, "for I never quarrel with her, but let her have her own way. I don't want to worry myself about trifles."

"Good man," said the stranger, "there are no trifles in this life. The smallest act is important, and that easy good nature of yours will ruin your family. Baffle that spirit to-day, and next Sunday take your boys and go to the house of God, whatever she says, and be a real man—at the head of your own house and family."

"It's rather late to begin," said Cutt's, shaking his head in a way that would have warned others from the trap in which his feet were fast.

"You see the purse is hers," he heeded, "and that has been a crueller fetter than her will to me. But I will try to begin anew, for her good and the children's."

The boy was sent with the message, but the boy wasn't sharp enough. Madam Cutt's discovered the whereabouts of her lord, tackled up and went after him. All the way home, and far into the night, she used her eloquence, both in pleadings and threatenings, to find out the mysterious errand of that hateful town nabob that had come into the country to separate happy families.

But Cutt's yielded himself up to a "dumb spirit" for the night, and no measure could induce him to talk on any subject, lest she should pry the mighty secret out of him.

About midnight she wore herself out and went to sleep; but at break of day she began. He then ventured to say, "As soon as breakfast is over I'll break the news to you."

"You'll never eat a morsel in my house, I can tell you," cries Xantippe, "till you have told me what the man wanted of you!"

"Then you'll wait a good while to hear it," said Cutt's, "for I have vowed I'd never tell till I had first eaten my breakfast," and with these words he went out.

Madam Cutt's endured the fortune as long as possible, and then got breakfast. She called to the door to no one in particular, "Come."

But Cutt's didn't come. After a while she went out to the barn and found him seated on the upturned half bushel measure calmly peeling and eating a raw turnip.

"It does seem as if this here man had possessed you! Your breakfast is coolin' do come in!"

Here was a pointed gained. Cutt's went in as requested, and ate his breakfast. When that was over, ma'am settled herself back in her chair with her face full of eager expectations, and said:

"Now begin. What did that ere man want?"

"He wanted some cedar posts," replied Cutt's calmly, without looking up; "and that was all."

If an arrow had struck Madam Cutt's, she could not have manifested more surprise and shame.

"I am the laughing-stock of this town," added Cutt's, "and from this hour I turn over a new leaf. I'm henceforth head of my family, and unless this house is made mine I shall finish off a room in the barn—which is mine—and you'll be welcome to share it with me. If not, I'll live there with the boys, and you will find me a civil neighbor."

News Summary

Small-pox is still raging badly in London. Paris will shortly be completely isolated. Nearly 75,000 persons emigrated from Ireland last year.

Shell from the insurgent batteries fall short of Mont Valerien. The avenues of Paris are filled with wag-gons containing wounded men.

The town of Neuilly has been set on fire by shells, and is now burning. All citizens under 55 years of age obliged to serve in the Commune ranks.

The Government contemplates exchanging the worn silver coin in Ireland for new coin. A Paris special to the Times says the Commune has delegated its powers to a committee of nine of its members.

The Municipal Council of Havre has deputed three of its members to mediate between Paris and Versailles. Representatives of Commerce and Industry intend to go to Versailles and make a fresh attempt at conciliation.

The Captain Relief Fund amounted at last report to £54,000. The widow of Captain Burgoyne has declined her share. There are in the world about 120,000,000 miles of railway, that have cost $1,000,000,000, and give employment to more than 1,000,000.

A woman's rights newspaper is about to be established in Paris. The men have failed to maintain order there, the women will now try it. Mr. John Peel (Liberal) was returned without opposition for Tamworth, in room of Sir Henry Bulwer. He spoke strongly in favor of the ballot, and said he was likewise prepared to vote for a Woman Suffrage Bill.

By a decree of the German Emperor, an order of merit for women and maidens is instituted, in acknowledgment of services rendered in the recent war. The decoration is to be bestowed on the recommendation of the Emperor.

ATROPHY ARRESTED.—FELLOWS' COMPOUND SYRUP OF HYPOPHOSPHITES.—Wasting of the tissues of the body is arrested, the muscles made firm, and the nerves regain their power by using Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites.

The British and Foreign Bible Society, which is said to be the only religious association, the income of which has exceeded the average during the past year is about to present copies of the Bible to all the widows of French and German soldiers killed in the late war.

A Business firm in Fair Haven, Connecticut, has posted the following "notice" on the front of their iron safe:—"All gentlemanly burglars are hereby notified that, owing to the insecurity of this box, no valuables are deposited therein, so please don't disturb it."

Canada now stands eighth, instead of eleventh, as last year, in the list of countries trading with England, importing, in proportion to population, more goods from England than any other country in the world, and three times as much as the United States.

It is stated, upon the authority of Garter King-at-Arms, that the Princess is to be called in her married life "The Princess Louise," and that when she and her husband are named together in Society they are to be the "Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne."

The Cork Herald announces the death of "probably the oldest man in the county," Mr. Maurice Ahera, farmer, Five-Mile-Bridge, near Ballinacross, and about six miles from Cork, at the age of 115. He had lived on that farm for 108 years, and retained all his faculties till within a fortnight of his death.

The movement of population from Ireland is said to be as great now as in the most disturbed years—a fact which excites some surprise in the Irish press. Although the season for emigration has only commenced, Queenstown is already crowded with emigrants, and it is expected that before summer the weekly departures from that port will average 2,000. The people come principally from Clare, Tipperary, Meath, Westmeath, and the King's County.

The "Voss Gazette" gives the following as the numbers of the troops engaged on both sides in the battle of Koniggratz and the principal battles of the Franco-German War:—Koniggratz, 240,000 Prussians, 220,000 Austrians and Saxons. Gravelotte, from 240,000 to 270,000 Germans. "at least," 210,000 French; Worth, 150,000 Germans, 60,000 French; Spicheren, 45,000 French, 32,000 Prussians; Mars-la-Tour, until half-past four in the afternoon, 45,000 Prussians against at first 120,000, afterwards 160,000 French; in the evening 100,000 Germans against 200,000 French.
