An old elm stood by my childhood's home, roam,

When our hearts are sad and dark clouds lower.

My father's hall own's the strangers sway, And the spot seems lone, so lone to me No sigh when I'm sad, no song when gay-From the lawn is gone that grand old tree A touch of love cheer'd my old time moan; My joy was lit by a face so fair, An angel's sigh in her silver tone,

A wealth of glee m her golden hair. That tone is now heard in angel song, That golden hair never turned to gray;

In sorrow or joy my soul still longs For voice and gold that have passed away Oh man! Oh men! in a changing world Are sorrows to lighten, joys to share; Our fellows may droop e'er flag be furled, The hero be crowned mid trumpets' blare

It will be remembered that when Mr.

Having more money at his command than he required he invested a considerable portion of the loan ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, in Canadian securities bearing six and seven per cent. interest. It was alleged by the Opposition at the time that the Government had not only diverted the proceeds of the loan from its legitimate use, but had availed them of a plethora of Intercolonial Railway money to make good deficiencies which they were not The highest marketprice given for Cattle, bold enough to acknowledge. The condition of the railway fund to day is the best possible answer to the animadversions and misstatements which the Opposition indulged in two years ago. --The Exchequer Bill which was so frequently succeed at by the Opposition, and which was never to be paid, is no longer in existence, and the Dominion has gained two or three hundred thousand dollars by a policy which was not only vehemently denounced by the Opposition, but which with reckless dis regard of the true interests of the country, was stigmatized as injurious "to its honor and credit." The Government policy was simply to invest in securities bearing a high rate of interest ture, he would say that no endeavor on his FARMERS' BOOT & SHOE STORE a sum of money which was not needed at positions among the nations of Europe, and the position of Europe, a sum of money which was not needed at positions. the time obtained at a lower rate. Napoleon the Second. There was a time when if the son of Napoleon had been presented to the French people, they would have chosen him Emperor by acclamation. Many a fair lady and gallant soldier were fain to kiss his hand, as the hand of their Sovereign during his life-long exile. But whether from fear of the Austrian Court, or from natural timidity, the Duke of Reichstadt ever shrank from these loval approaches. He seemed to have, with all his self-consciousness as the heir of Napoleon, with all his wild dreams of future eminence, an instinctive conviction that his hopes would never end in attainment. What a Hamlet struggle his whole life was! Are we wrong in seeing in the fate of this poor boy a continuance of Napoleon's divinely-inflicted punishment. His seed was not to inherit the earth, however meek and mild and affectionate it might be. The son of the daughter of Austria's Emperor, for whom he had put away from him his lawful wife, was to be a lackland and a prisoner, a prey to ambition which had no energy, and agitated by aspirations which were denied achievement; while the children and de scendants of her whom he so cruelly rejected were destined to occupy the very happiness.
