Poetry.

A Grand Old Poem.

Who shall judge a man from manners? Who shall know him by his dress? Paupers may be fit for Princes, Princes fit for something less;

Crumpled shirts and dirty jacket, May beset the golden ore Of the deepest thought and feeling— Satin vests could do no more.

There are springs of crystal nectar Oft welling out of stone; There are purple buds and golden, Hidden, crushed and overgrown. God, who counts by souls, not dresses, Loves and prospers you and me, While he values thrones the highest But as pebbles in the sea.

Man, unpraised above his fellows, Oft forgets his fellows then; Masters, rulers, lords, remember That your meanest hind is a man; Men by honor, men by feeling, Men by thought and men by fame, Claiming equal rights to sunshine, In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam embroidered oceans, There are little weed clad rills; There are feeble inch high saplings, There are cedars on the hills; God, who counts by souls, not stations, Loves and prospers you and me; For to him all famed distinctions Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders Of a nation's wealth or fame; Titled laziness is pensioned, Fed and fattened on the same; By the sweat of other's foreheads, Living only to rejoice; While the poor man's outraged freedom Vainly lifts up its voice.

Truth and justice are eternal, Born with loveliness and light; Secret wrongs shall never prosper While there is a sunny right; God, whose word-world-wide is singing Boundless love to you and me, Sinks oppression with its titles, As the pebbles in the sea.

Selections.

A Backwoods Adventure.

A Virginia banker who was the chairman of a hotel infidel club, was once travelling through Kentucky, having with him bank bills to the amount of $1000. When he came to a lonely spot, where robberies and murders were said to be frequent he was soon lost, through taking the wrong road.

The darkness of night came quickly over him, and how to escape from the threatening danger he knew not. In his alarm he suddenly espied in a distance a dim light, and urging his horse onward he at length came to a wretched looking cabin. He knocked, the door was opened by a woman who said her husband was out hunting, but would soon return, and she was sure he would cheerfully give him a shelter for the night.

The gentleman put up his horse and entered the cabin, but with feeling better imagined than described. Here he was with a large sum of money, perhaps in the house of a robber whose name was a terror to the country. In a short time the man of the house arrived. He had on a deer-skin, and a bear-skin cap, and seemed much fatigued, and in no talking mood. All this boded the infidel no good. He felt for his pistols in his pockets, and placed them so as to be ready for instant use. The man asked the stranger to retire to bed, but he determined to sell his life as dearly as he could. His fears grew to perfect agony.

What was to be done? At length the backwoodsman arose and reaching to a wooden shelf, took down an old book, and said: "Well, stranger, if you won't go to bed, I will; but it is always my custom to read a chapter in the Holy Scriptures before I go to bed." What a change did these words produce! Alarm was removed from this sceptic's mind. Though vowing himself an infidel, he had more confidence in the Bible. He felt safe. He felt that a man who kept a Bible in his house, and read it, and bent his knees in prayer, was no robber or murderer. He listened to the good man and dismissed his fears, and lay down and slept as calmly as he did under his father's roof. From that night he ceased to revile the good old Bible.

Persons who have become thoroughly chilled from any cause, may have their circulation at once restored by taking into the stomach a teaspoonful of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment mixed in a little cold water, well-sweetened.

STRONGEST minds are often those of whom the world hears least.

Every farmer who owns a good stock of horses, cattle and sheep, and intends to keep them through the winter, should get at once a good stock of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders. One dollar's worth will save at least a half ton of hay.

How Smith asked the Old Man.

Smith had just asked Mr. Thompson's daughter if she would give him a lift out of bachelorhood, and she said—"Yes."

It therefore became absolutely necessary to get the old gentleman's permission, so as Smith said, the arrangements might be made to hop the conjugal twig.

Smith said he'd rather pop the interrogatory to all of old Thompson's daughters, and his sisters, and his lady cousins, and his aunt Hannah, in the country, and the whole of his female relations, that ask old Thompson. But it had to be done, and so he sat down and studied out a speech which he was to disgorge at old Thompson the very first time he got a shy at him. So Smith dropped in on him one Sunday evening, when all the family had meandered around to meeting, and found him doing a sum in beer measure.

"How are you, Smith?" said old Thompson, as the former walked in, white as a piece of chalk, and trembling as if he had swallowed a condensed earthquake. Smith was afraid to answer, 'cause he wasn't sure about that speech. He knew he had to keep his grip on it while he had it there, or it would slip from him quicker than an oil cell through an augur hole. So he blurted out—"Mr. Thompson, sir: Perhaps it may not be unknown to you, that during an extended period of some five years, I have been busily engaged in the prosecution of a commercial enterprise—"

"Is that so, and keepin' it a secret all this time, while I thought you were tendin' store? Well, by George, you're one of them now, ain't you?"

Smith had begun to think it all over again to get the run of it.

"Mr. Thompson, sir: Perhaps it may not be unknown to you, that during the extended period of five years, I have been busily engaged in the prosecution of a commercial enterprise, with the determination to secure a sufficient maintenance—"

"Sit down Smith, and helped yourself to beer: Don't stand there holdin' your hat, like a blind beggar, with paralysis. I never have seen you behave yourself so queer in all my born days."

Smith had been knocked out again, and so he had to wander back again and take a fresh start.

"Mr. Thompson, sir: It may not be unknown to you, that during an extended period of five years, I have been engaged in the prosecution of a commercial enterprise, with the determination to procure a sufficient maintenance—"

"A which ance?" asked old Thompson; but Smith held on to his last word as if it was his only chance, and went on: "In the hope that some day I might enter wedlock, and bestow my earthly possessions upon one whom I could call my own. I have been a lonely man, sir, and have felt that it is not good for man to be alone; therefore I world—"

"Neither it is, Smith; I'm glad you dropped in. How's the old man?"

"Mr. Thompson, sir," said Smith, in despairing confusion, raising his voice to a yell, "it may not be unknown to you that, during an extended period of a lonely man, I have been engaged to enter wedlock, and bestowed all my enterprise on one whom I could determine to be good for certain possessions—no, I mean—that it—that—Mr. Thompson, sir: It may not be unknown—"

"And then again it may. Look here Smith; you'd better lay down and take something warm—you ain't well!"

Smith, sweating like a four year old colt, went in again.

"Mr. Thompson, sir: It may not be lonely to you to prosecute me whom you call a friend, for a commercial maintenance, but—but—ch—dang it—Mr. Thompson, sir: It—"

"Oh, Smith, you talk like a fool. I never seen a more first-class idiot in the course of my whole life. What's the matter with you anyhow?"

"Mr. Thompson, sir," said Smith in an agony of bewilderment, "it may not be known that you prosecuted a lonely man who is not good for a commercial period of wedlock for some five years, but—"

"See here, Mr. Smith, you're drunk, and if you can't behave better than that you'd better leave; if you don't, I'll chuck you out, or I'm a Duckman."

Mr. Thompson, sir," said Smith; frantic with despair, "it may not be unknown to you that my earthly possessions are engaged to enter wedlock five year with a sufficiently lonely man who is not good for a commercial maintenance—"

"The very deuce he isn't. Now just git up and git, or I'll knock what little brains out of you you've got left."

With that old Thompson took Smith and shot him into the street as if he'd run him against a locomotive, going out at the rate of forty miles an hour. Before old Thompson had time to shut the front door, Smith collected his legs and one thing and another that were lying around on the pavement, arranged himself in a verticle position, and yelled out: "Mr. Thompson, sir: It may not be unknown to you—which made the old man so wretched mad that he went out and set a bull terrier on Smith before he had a chance to lift a brogan, and there was a scientific dog fight, with odds in favour of the dog, for he had an awful hold for such a small animal."

Smith afterwards married the girl, and lived happily about two months. At the end of that time he told a confidential friend that he would willingly take more trouble and undergo a million more dog bites to get rid of her.

The Half Cannot be Told.

The half, did I say? Nay, the man does not live that can tell half of the story of its woes. Exaggeration regarding intemperance is possible. The fatigued fancy falters in its flight before it comes up to the fact. The mind's eye cannot take in the countless miseries in its train. No human art can put into that picture shades darker than the truth. Put into everything conceivable, that is terrible or revolting, print health in ruins, hopes destroyed, affections crushed, prayer silenced; paint the chosen seats of paternal care, of maternal devotion, all, all vacant; paint all the crimes of every nature, murder standing over a grave which it has no means to cover, down to the meanest dejection, still confident of success; paint home a desert, and shame a tyrant, and poverty the legitimate child as well as the prolific mother of vice; paint the dark valley of the shadow of death peopled with living slaves; paint a landscape with trees whose fruits are poison, and whose shade is death, with mountain torrents tributary to an ocean whose very waves are fire; put into the distant background the vanishing vision of a blest past, and into the foreground the terrible certainty of an accursed future; paint prisons with doors that open inwards; people the scene with men whose shattered frames are tenanted by tortured souls, with children upon whose lips no smiles can play, and women into whose cheeks furrows have been burnt by tears, wrung by anguish, and hearts ready to break with unutterable agonies.

Point such a picture, and when you are ready to show it, do let in the rays of the heavenly sun, but illumine it with the flares of the infernal fires; and still you will be bound to say that your horrible picture falls short of the truth. Who, then, can afford to tamper with this accursed thing? Who will not keep his children from it by his admonition and example?—[Rev. Geo. Woodbridge, U. S.

Superintendence.

Hon. Horace Greeley, in his address before the Labor Reform Convention in this city last Spring, stated that he had worked harder as an employer than as an employe. The proprietor of a large estate on the Hudson River lately told one of his workmen, "I work as hard, as early, and as late as any of you; you get paid for it; I do not!" The head of a considerable establishment in this city, when he hears "wages-slavery" talked of, says, "I am the sole slave here!" The President of a large company remarks, "To discharge my duties fully and properly, I ought to have nothing to do but to answer questions." More than one business head of a newspaper office testifies that he gets more advertising than his canvassers. Self-styled "working men" often talk as if superintendence was a mere excuse for drawing a good salary; a mere idling and pretence. To such we would commend the story of the deacon, whose pastor requested him to conduct the service, and who, after entering the pulpit and making the effect, exclaimed, "Brethren, if you think this is easy, just come up here and try it!" Also that of the colored barber who, being rebuked for charging fifty cents for shaving, said, "I don't! I charge twenty-five cents for de shave, and twenty-five for de know how!" Knowledge goes for something in business; and when a superintendent, to be owner or employe, draws a large salary, he receives in it wages for the extra time work given to gaining the knowledge and skill needed to oversee and direct numbers of workers.
