wet brush. But notwithstanding these things there is a cheerfulness about this craped but, a look of making the best" of things, which is very different from the resigned melancholy of hat No. 1, and you may be sure that the clerk who wears it is something of a Mark Tapley in his way. Then we have the unexceptional Lincoln and Bennet, the very type of all that is respectable. It is the responsible man, middle aged and well-to do, who wears that hat. Next to it hangs a small, self asserting hat, one that catches the eye from the first moment of inspection. Vanity is written on the curl of its brim, and concert all over it. It sure ly belongs to the "smart man" of the of fice, and it affords a curious contrast to its next neighbor, the solt, grey hat. Fluccid and unshapely, this one tell as plainly as words can do, of gin and billards, debts. cheap cigars, scanty fare, and all the ac companiments of an uncertain, shifty life.

Who does not know a sporting hat when he sees it? Again, there is a distinguished foreigner hat, which is equally unmistake able. There is another sort of hat that comes to us with people who present begging letters. It is, above all things, an apologetic hat. The brim droops ever so slightly towards the great and all the way round wards the outer edge all the way round, looking like the caves of a Gothic house. The wearer glides into the room, his head on one side, and, whether on his head or in his hand, the nat wears a smile of excuse, a deprectory smile. Like other and better people, the presentor of the begging letter makes a great deal of play with his hat, twisting it about, or coaxing and petting it, giving point thereby to his discourse. Farmers, as a body have hats that are all their own. The agricultural hat is a perfectly distinct species. So is the officers musti hat; so is the hat worn by members of any learned body. The hats that go to an archæolo-gical meeting, however distinct each may be from each have a strong family likeness. They are remarkably tall in the crown, remarkably fluffy about the nap, and they are, in every respect, the very reverse of the hat a man of fashion would choose. Like their owners, the archeological hats devote themselves to the more serious business of life, disdaining the modern and the com

Again, clerical hats are a class apart. There are degrees and differences amongst them, and a person of observant habits will distinguish at a glance between high and low tenets. It is next to impossible to define the grades of hats, and their relation to doctrine, but it may be advanced in a general way that the more picturesque the style the "higher" the Church an, until among the ritualistic parsons the chimner pot is abandoned for a felt hat which is consingerman to that glorious sombrero in which artists revel."—Canadian Illustrated News, has developed some signal instances of ceived. heroism. Not to mention the cases of those physicians from other cities who have voluntarily sought the infected loculity to heal the sick, there are noticeable examples of self-sacrifice among the citizens of the town. While a very large majority of those whose means permitted have fled with their families from the place, others equally able to defray the expsnse of flight have bravely remained to share the peril and privations of their neighbors. Many of these Good Samaritans have died and many are now ill. If calamities so dreadful as this Shreveport scourge bring into bold relief the darker phases of human nature it is equally true that they show humanity in its brightest aspects.

A serious shooting affray occurred at the Welland Canal on Saturday. One Dixon first assaulted a young man named Youngman, and subsequently shot him, it is feared, fatally.

Two American whalers were wrecked in Hudson's Bay last sumer, and a portion of their crews have only now reached their homes, in New Bedford, Mass. Several of the crew died upon a barren island last winter, which was excessively cold-so severe, indeed, that the natives of that cold climate died by the score.

Mrs Charles S. Stratton, the wife of General Tom Thumb, who was so severely injured in Middleborough, Mass., a few weeks ago by falling down stairs, is so far recovered as to be able to ride out occasionally. She and her sister, Miss Minnie, are famous horsewomen, and frequently come to the village with their trim little ponies and carriage. Wednesday was their first appearence since the accidect and the convalescent held the FIRE.-NEWMARKET, Oct. 6 .- Between 5 and 6 o'clock this evening a fire broke out in a large untenanted two story wood building on Mill street, belonging to Dr. Nash. Although a stiff breeze was blowing the two fire companies succeeded in confining the fire to the upper story, with the assistance of the inhabitants carrying water to the engines, the tank being exhausted. There was no insurance. The fire was doubtless the work of an incendiary.
