Spanish Women.

Mexican people dance and sing, fast and pray, as if the world knew nothing but peace. Every night the Plaza is filled with people, young and old, The senoritas walk up and down with that grace and queenly statehness, which none other but Spanish women, or Spanish-American women, are capable of. Even the Indian wo men, who are just tinctured with Spanish blood, walk with an ease and elegance that fascinates the beholder. Their shawls are thrown gracefully over their shoulders and around their head, and the rich, large, black eves peer out with tender glances. The opera "I Goti" (the Goths), which is more one sees of these Spanish wo- attracting so much in Italy, is but men, where they are young, beauti- twenty-three years old. He is the gone" ful, and unsophisticated, the better he son of a poor peasant who actually likes them. They sometimes sit to- sold his little cottage and plot of gether on the seats in the Plaza, at the twilight hours, and chant soft and sweet Spanish love-songs, with a pathetic tenderness which would infatuate the most stony-hearted person. In their homes they are always singing and playing the guitar-their favori'e musical instrument-or else gossipping about one another. The gossip of a Spanish woman has no poison in it. It is only when one senorita invades the sacred realms of love over which another presides, that her Spanish blood boils and rages. To supplant any woman in the affections of her lover, is to place the successful fair one in a most dangerous position, for the jilted jealous beauty can do dread deeds all for love's sweet

A correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle, in an account of the recent snow blockade, says: would be hard to fitly describe the beauty and grandeur of the scones presented themselves from which Alta to Emigrant Gap. The fiercely driving snow, the wild, rugged scenery, the noise and clatter and din of the powerful machines which were forcing their way through the howling blasts, the piles and piles of snow which ascended on either side of the track, shut out all view for miles, save when on some embankment over which the plough had hur!ed its fleecy furrow, were all the grandest of sights. The only wonder is that the plough was not crunched into sawdust. It not only withstood this enormous strain, but it kept to the track and cut an eleven-foot passage in the drift with the precision of a surgeon's knife.
