

Love, Sausages, and Law.

The old Court of Common Pleas, ever since the days when the law sought to lend additional dignity to its administrations by Aldermanic presence, has in common with all civil courts, occasionally had its grave decorum invaded by the humorous and ridiculous. Such a variation from ordinary phlegmatic commercial litigation, and presenting a strong flavor of love and sausages mingled, has come before Judge Latmore, in the special term of that court. The suit is brought by Caesar Wall against August Rath, to dissolve their partnership, plaintiff also asking for a receiver of the partnership property and an injunction restraining defendant from interfering with the same pending a decision of the action. The immediate ground of plaintiff's complaint is that the defendant, without his consent, drew from the bank $500 of the partnership funds, which he applied to his own use. On the part of the defendant it is claimed that he was induced to put $6,000 into plaintiff's business on the representations that it was producing a profit of over $50,000 a year, and gave up his own business, which was producing a profit of over $10,000 a year; that the result was very far from bearing out the representations of plaintiff—so far, indeed, that all defendant was able to save out of his investment of $6,000 was the $500 which he drew out of the bank, and which prompted plaintiff to institute the present proceedings. Behind this sombre cloud of over vulgar dollars and cents, however, the affidavits in the case disclose a silver lining of love. A few years since, August, it appears, dyed for a living in Jersey, while Caesar ministered to the living in the form of sausages, sauerkraut, and other delicatessen. August occasionally paid a visit to Caesar at the latter's store in the Boreway, and there discovered, among other palatable dainties, the existence of a handsome daughter of the rubicund proprietor. The fair one was then (July, 1874), temporarily absent in Germany, finishing her education; but from the glowing description given of her charms by her father, the impressionable August fell in love, and was soled only by the promise of Caesar to introduce him to the soon returning beauty. As a foretaste of the happiness which awaited the lover, the father gave him a lace jacket which had once adorned the fair form of his adored one, with the delicate threads of which his heart might become entwined, as he professionally cleansed from them the dust which stained their whiteness. This jacket proved the death of the lawyer, for when his task was finished he was "dead in love," and more helplessly bound by Cupid's cable than ever was a shorn Samson. At last the fair one appeared in person upon the scene, and the reality confirmed the accuracy of all the pictures which his imagination had painted of her. The knight of the lace jacket felt ready to attack any windmill that should dare to send its blast to visit the cheek of his lady too roughly, and hesitated not so to assure her. Dusty tomes were searched for epigrammatic sonnets, and the doughty though dying knight was living on love. Anticipating an early co-partnership with the daughter, August readily consented to form a preliminary one with her father, and thus 'twas claimed some about the partnership which forms the subject of the present litigation, and the only one which thus far the too confiding August seems destined to form with the family. But while August was diligently disposing of "boissons" and revelling amid the appetizing odors of "limburger," an insidious disciple of Esculapius was revelling in the smiles of his all but affianced. This sawbones, with his unsympathizing Janes and unpalatable poultices couched behind a fair exterior, and a cloud of tender, loving expressions, seems to have effectually supplanted August in the affections of her over whose fair form he had in the imaginations of his earlier love gracefully draped the lace jacket, and at a later day hoped would nestle in the warmth of "a manly bosom. Realizing, like Jacob of old, that he had not been fairly dealt with, he concluded to lay hands on what he could, and drawing out the $500 in the bank put it in his pocket, and shaking the dust of the home of his faithless one from his feet, and sneezing the accumulated and now offensive odors of her father's cheese from his clouded brain, he retired to Jersey to dye.

Such is the story of August, and he claims that marriage with the daughter of plaintiff was among not the least of the advantages held out to him by the latter to induce him to become his partner in business. On the part of plaintiff the love story is told in another form, the claim being that defendant entered into the co-partnership voluntarily, without any inducements on the part of plaintiff connected with the marriage of his daughter or otherwise, although, as plaintiff has since learned, the idea of being near the idol of his affections, and the hope that they would some day ripen into marriage, were probably among the inducements to a co-partnership in defendant's own mind.

No receiver being asked for to take charge of the fair one who has evidently—innocently, perhaps—been the cause of the litigation, Judge Latmore held that he could not take into consideration those portions of the affidavits relating to her custody. As to the partnership property, he had no doubt it should be taken care of pending the settlement of the relative rights of the partners, and he therefore appointed Mr. Nathaniel Jarvis, jr., receiver, to take charge of it.

Mark Twain says:—"To the poor whites along the Mississippi river, children are a merciful provision of Providence, enabling them to take exercise without exertion."

A twelve-year-old girl is on trial in Brownsville, Tenn., for the motiveless killing of three children. She fed them rat poison "just to see them die," as she explains.

SOMETHING NEW.—It will be seen by reference to our advertising columns on this page that Prof. Hand, of Hamilton, Ont., has extensive facilities for manufacturing every description of fireworks, signals, rockets, shipping lights, etc., etc. As this is the only firework manufacturer in Canada, and the goods turned out by Prof. Hand are in every way superior to those manufactured in the United States, it will be to the advantage of parties requiring anything in this line to obtain price list, which may be had on application to Prof. Hand.

"Do you see that trunk, sir," demanded an indignant traveller of Charley Bender, the courteous Lake Shore baggage agent, as he observed a demolished packing box, to which a check was hanging that corresponded with one he held in his hand. "That trunk is ruined, sir, and I demand damages." "Yes, sir," said the smiling Charley, "you ought to have pay for that trunk. People get a tender like trunk like that and pack it up for a hundred miles' journey as if they were going to the Pyramids. They put in two or three good-sized hams, a crock or two of apple butter or fifteen pounds of nails, a few pounds of shot, new castings for a couple of ploughs, and three or four changes of clothing. Then they lug it down here at the last minute, with a handle burst off one end, and expect it to go through easy enough to allow a horse to ride on the end. That's the way your trunks get broken, my dear sir. Thirty-five, sixty-four, Cleveland Branch. All right. Good morning."

Some months ago a large and powerfully built man went into the office of Judge Smith, of Austin, Texas, and asked the Judge to send him to a lunatic asylum. The man said he was a dangerous madman, and not fit to be running around loose. His appearance of blunt candor did not convince the Judge, and he told the man he could do nothing for him. The man went his way. The other day he visited the office again, and the Judge recognized him. There was another man (Mr. Denton) also in the office, and it was well he was. Judge Smith asked the visitor what he could do for him, and the visitor drew a long knife and told the Judge he had come to kill him. Now, a big knife drawn in the hands of a big man in Texas means something. The Judge grasped his heavy cane and Denton picked up a chair. There was a lively skirmish, at the end of which several chairs were broken, the cane was splintered, and the man with the knife was lying on the floor with a bleeding head. This time the Judge thought the man was mad enough to send to the lunatic asylum, and he sent him accordingly.

T. J. Milliken, one of the wealthiest merchants in Sacramento, took for a second wife a young octoon. She was very pretty, well educated, and her African blood was barely perceptible. The marriage was distasteful to the children of the first wife, who would have no acquaintance with their stepmother. A short time ago Milliken died. Having made no will, the octoon wife could only claim the wife's usual share of the property. The estate was worth about a million dollars. The children are contesting her right to anything, basing their suit on the fact of Mrs. Milliken being part negro, the California law declaring that "all marriages between white persons and negroes or mulattoes are illegal and void." The evidence shows that during the years of Mr. Milliken's wedded life with this second wife she was received in good society, although her taint of blood was well known, and that his affection and respect for her was great. The defence is that the law particularly designates "negroes and mulattoes" as ineligible for marriage with white persons, and that the wife in this instance was neither, being only one eighth negro. A decision has not been reached.—N. Y. Sun.

A funny incident lately occurred in the gas office in Chicago. The wife of a member of the Illinois Senate entered to pay her bill, carrying her porte-monnaie as was her custom, in her right hand. Having occasion to write her signature, she changed her pocketbook to her left hand, and started to go out. Noticing that her right hand was empty she missed her pocketbook, and turning to a rough-looking individual, who had been standing by, she exclaimed angrily, "I'll thank you for my pocketbook, sir." Two or three of the bookkeepers rushed out expecting to see the man try to escape, but he stood still, and calmly answered, "I haven't it, ma'am." "You certainly have; I laid it down a moment ago here, and you are the only person who could have taken it." "I beg your pardon, ma'am," said the stranger, "but I am not thief. I have not got your pocketbook." "I'll have you arrested and searched," cried the irate lady. "As you please," said the man. And as the madam tried to open the door and call a policeman she discovered her purse in her left hand. The stranger smilingly listened to a profuse and prolonged apology.

Women and Money.

"A wife should never ask her husband for money at mealtimes."

By no manner of means; nor at any other time; because, it is to be hoped, he will be gentlemanly enough to spare her that humiliating necessity. Let him hand her his portmanteau every morning, with carte blanche to help herself. The consequence would be, she would lose all desire for the contents, and hand it back, half the time without abstracting a single sou.

It's astonishing men have no more diplomacy about such matters. I should like to be a husband. There are wives whom I verily believe might be trusted to make way with a ten dollar bill without risk to the connubial donor. I'm not speaking of those doll-baby libels upon womanhood, whose chief ambition is to be walking advertisements for the dressmaker; but a rational, refined, sensible woman, who knows how to look like a lady upon small means; who would both love and respect a man less for requiring an account of every copper; but who, at the same time would willingly wear a hat or a garment that is "out of date," rather than involve a noble, generous-hearted husband in unnecessary expenditures.

I repeat it—"It isn't every man who has a call to be a husband." Half the married men should have their license taken away, and the same number of judicious bachelors put in their places. I think the attention of the representatives should be called to this. They can't expect to come down to town and peep under all the ladies bonnets the way they do, and have all the newspapers free gratis and two dollars a day besides, without paying their way.

It's none of my business, but I question whether their wives, whom they have left at home, stringing dried apples, know how spruce they look in their new hats and coats, or how facetious they grow, with their landlady's daughter; or how many of them pass themselves off for bachelors to verdant spinsters. Nothing truer than that little couplet of Shakespeare's:

When the cat's away
The mice will play.

Fashion Items.

Camel's hair-cloth, plain and twilled, is one of the popular fabrics for spring wear. It is very soft and fine, and not unlike cashmere. Flowers will play a prominent part in the decoration of hats this season, and will be worn both in compact clusters and in trailing sprays. Skirts for the street will be made conveniently short for the spring and summer; the basques are shorter, and the small coat sleeves will retain their popularity. Among the best wool fabrics spring suits are plain and plaid do boges, some twilled, some loosely woven in new gray and brown shades, and all of excellent quality. The finish about the neck of dresses will be the same this season as last. A standing collar, flaring behind and turned away in front, with a frill of lace or a linen collar, will be the style, and when soft silk ties of either plain or damask silk are used, the neck wear of women is far more becoming than it has been in years. New aprons are longer and more clinging than those worn at present. They extend within an inch or two of the bottom of the front breadth of the dress skirt, and in some cases are without seams, being made of but one breadth or double-width goods, yet these narrow aprons are drawn back to meet on the tummy, where a tastefully draped sash gives the slight drapery now considered necessary for the back. There are also aprons that are square on side and rounded on the other, while another style is pointed down on one side in the Grecian fashion. Costumes for spring are made up partly of silk and partly of wool goods of light quality, either plain, plaid or striped. The silk forms the lower skirt and sleeves; the basque and overskirt or apron are of wool. The two fabrics in a suit are usually of kindred shades of one color though quiet contrasts, such as gray with brown or violet, will be much worn. Lower skirts are not altered in shape, and the first importations show commendable simplicity in their trimmings. A bias-gathered flounce, headed and edged with narrow side-pleatings sewed on as a ruffa—that is, with a rough seam on the under side—is the trimming of some of the handsomest skirts. The side-pleating only is used on the apron and basque. The novelty in the favorite shirring is to shirr the flounce in lengthwise rows, making puffs downward instead of around the skirt.

MATHUSHEK PIANOS!

STILL UNRIVALLED!
New York, June 24, 1867.
Messrs. BARLOW & MATHEWER—
I cannot refrain from a frank avowal of the very great superiority of the Mathushek Piano, as in every respect superior to all others. The "Orchestra" is a marvel of power and sweetness, and in all respects equals any Concert Grand; while the "Coffin" possesses the power of any ordinary square piano by far, and is equally as bright and pure in its sweet tones.

I Wish I Were Rich.
"I wish I were rich. I would buy everything," cried Charlie.
"The sun, moon and stars?" inquired William.
"No everything that can be got with money."
"That's not happiness," said William.
"Get your hat, Charlie, and come with me to Mr. Morrison's," said the father.
"Oh! please not, papa, he is such a disagreeable, miserable old man, with his cross looks, and grumpy foot, hobbling about groaning."
"I think you would like to live with him," said his father.
"I, papa? I would rather live down in a coal-pit."
"With him you can have all that would be bought with money."
"I recant, I see it won't do," said the boy. "Health cannot be bought with money."
"Nor good temper, nor friendship, nor life," said William.
"Above all," added their father, "the favor of God cannot be bought with money. Be content with as much of it as God gives, and seek to use it aright."

A young man of Carlo, Ill., while talking to an old gray-headed farmer on the extreme cold weather, asked the old man if he could explain the reason. The old man said, "Why, yes, dare aint anything singler" about it. "I can explain that in about a minute. Don't you member dat comat we had las' fall? Dat comat struck dis yard and caused dat yartquake, and it butted so hard dat it done sent dis here yart about tree or four hundred miles fur nor north, and dat's de cause of the present cold weather."

CERTAIN AND POSITIVE.

AS PROOF NOTICE THE RESULTS.
Messrs. DAVIS & BURTON, Montreal.
I will certify to the relief and perfect cure of a severe attack of Rheumatism, by the use of the Diamond Rheumatic Cure. Suffering with it for years, and with increasing severity in each succeeding year, I gladly availed myself of the use of the Diamond Rheumatic Cure, with the result as above stated. I have consequently recommended it with equal success to several of my friends who have been similarly attacked with Rheumatism.

Amherst, Nov. 20th, 1874.
We would call the attention of our readers to the Diamond Rheumatic Cure, advertised in another column. We do so having some experience in its use. Being eighty years of age, and suffering from Rheumatism, I was much troubled in the shoulders and hands. Hardly three months have elapsed after using a single bottle, and I have had no recurrence of rheumatic attack, although previously I suffered with it almost constantly.
We scarcely could hope to be cured from using one or two bottles, but it has continued so that it is a sovereign remedy. We believe a couple more bottles will effect a permanent cure, and would urge our readers to give it a trial also.

RHEUMATISM
Is a disease of the blood, and no substantial relief can be afforded without cleansing the blood from the fibrous substances which obstruct circulation, causing inflammation and pain.
The great success of the DIAMOND RHEUMATIC CURE in curing this disease is owing to its power of converting the blood from its diseased condition to a healthy condition, and regulating the bowels, which is very essential in this disease, and no cure will be effected until the bowels are regular. The Diamond Rheumatic Cure, and the pain will subside, and the use of my liniment is highly recommended. I beseech the day that the DIAMOND RHEUMATIC CURE was put to my attention.
Gratefully Yours,
WM. BRODIE.

Gentlemen—For the past two years I have been severely troubled with Rheumatism. I was suffering the most acute pain and was unable to get up. I have tried many physicians, and used numerous pills and medicines but I still continue to grow worse. It is now about four years since I commenced taking the DIAMOND RHEUMATIC CURE, and the pain has all left me, and the use of my liniment is highly recommended. I beseech the day that the DIAMOND RHEUMATIC CURE was put to my attention.
Gratefully Yours,
WM. BRODIE.
