Why was I sad, when never yet Has my heart known the least regret

Over that whispered No? But why, Reading the notice, did I sigh?

No analyst can guess the cause; A woman's reason laughs at laws.

Sure I am glad to know the wound I gave is healed, that he has found Love's blessedness and peace; and you A woman never can forget

The man who once has loved her: and To-day I seem to see him stand,

With every glance a mute careas. Still pleading for the longed-for Yes His early love for me is dead— Another lives in that love's stead.

He must be glad that long ago, Instead of Yes, I gave him No.

Perhaps that is the reason why I read the notice with a sigh.

DAY.

DAY.

Alike the human life is day,—
Alike our birth its dawning ray.
So young so bright,—
And if at morn the sky 's o'ercast
The storm it broods will seldom last
Unit the night.
Alike stern manhood is the noon
Doo, ed to set in darkness, how soon
So too i- life;
For though life's morn be bright and fair,
It soon may set in dark dispuir,
And like day's tempest strife.
I'erthrow our morn's brightest hopes with a breath
Nor beam sgain till life be wrapt in death.

THE TWO BACHELORS.

PART I.

It was in the summer of 61 that Jack Fer-ars and myself, then gay bachelors of 30, weary of the business that had surged in upon us during the winter months, rented between us a small shooting-box in the Westbetween his a small shooting-hox in the western Highlands, with a view of recruiting our

"Altegether this is very pleasant, Jack," in an uninterrupted flow ever since, strengthened by the test of time. We had, moreover, numberless things in common, among the most important of which was we were both confirmed bachelors; in good truth, bachelors proud of the name—bachelors who never intended to be anything but bachelors, and who took poculiar pleasure in saying so, and who took poculiar pleasure in saying so, the handsome appendage; "I didn't

It was therefore with brilliant anticipation of the delight we were to experience in each other's society, that we found ourselves the occupants of a pretty villa on the outskirts of a little outlandish place in the Highlands, so far removed from all friends and acquaintances. With a sigh of relief and a delightful feeling of freedom, we wheeled our chairs into the open bow window on the night of the broad-brimmed hat that shaded it was converging and lighting our cigars as the own. our arrival, and lighting our eigars, sat down bright and beautiful to enjoy the beautiful scene before us. "Good morning, rather," echoed Jack, as he shut his door; "and I hope the ghost of "Robin Grey" wont disturb your slumbers."

A sharp rat-tat on my bedroom door, and the familiar "Hallo, old boy," of Jack outside, awoke me from one of the most delightful and refreshing sleeps I had enjoyed for a long time. To say the least of it, I felt fierce to be thus awakened. "Confound you, Ferrars," I shouted; "what do you want? Be off?"

Yesterday Mesers. Moody and Sankey commenced their work among the unregenerate, and three meetings were held at the New Tabernacle (as the old depot has been styled), all of which were densely througed; the morning meeting for which admission I cried out to my friend and the seronaut, but in vain. The spectators below, thinking I was some serial acrobat who was about to turn fifty double somersets and then alight on his feet before them, cheered sufficiently to drown my voice.

The parties in the car could not see me. But by the hat swung over the side occasionally, I knew they were bowing to the crowd, below. Meanwhile I was swinging like a pendulum below them, with only ten fingers to sustain the weight of a hundred and eighty pounds (I'm rather stout), and to prevent me from being thinly spread over the ground beneath, from "larding the lean earth" with my human form divine! What an age of terror!

At the close of the meeting this (Monday) morning, Mr. Meody said, "Before we close I wish to give out a few notices. The Father's meeting which was opened last night, will be continued every evening, and a third inquiry meeting will be opened. The meetings now are not for Christians, but those out of Christ, and he hoped the Christians would not crowd the latter class out, but allow them to come to the front. MATHUSHEK PLANOS! STILL UNRIVALLEDI

MESSRS. BARLOW & MATHUSHUK-Misens, Barkow & Matherier.

1 cannot refrain from a frank avowal of the very great superfority of the Mathershek Plance, as in every respect superior to all others. The "Orachestra" is a marvel of power and sweetness and in all respects equals any Concert Grand; while the "Colibri" power-set the power of any-sordinary square plane by our bost makers, and really has no equal in purity and sweetness of time.
