Considering the increased and rapidly increasing circulation of THE HERALD they are fixed at a low figure, in fact considerably lower than many country papers of no larger circulation.

TURKEY AND SERBIA.

It is not for us to blame the people of Serbia if they make a renewed attempt to free themselves from the remnant of Turkish authority which afflicted their fore-fathers for generations; and if Russia can only be restrained from an attempt to extend her sway to the injury of her neighbours and of civilization, we should be very well content to see all the countries on the eastern side of the Black Sea formerly severed from the Turkish Empire, and become free and independent states.

"Turkey in Europe" is an anomaly, and the prejudices and habits of the Mussulmans, whose power of the sword is departed, should no longer be allowed to interfere with the prosperity of large and fertile, though thinly peopled countries. As a matter of neighbourhood, Austria has much more to do with these provisions than Russia.

The Austrian frontier stretches along the north of Croatia, Bosnia, Serbia, and Wallachia. The Russian plea rests mainly on the pretence of religious sympathy, that being a mere attempt to pass herself off before the world as the representative of the Eastern Church, as the Pope represents the Latin Church; and such atrocities as those recently reported from Bulgaria, must naturally raise the indignation, and stimulate the fears of the surrounding States. It may seem rather impertinent that a little State like Serbia should take upon itself to disturb the peace of the world, should stir up anxieties in the cabinets of Great Powers, and should threaten to scatter the sparks of the incendiary far and wide.

But little States, like little men, have often a high idea of their own importance; and if they cannot do much good, they like to make the world feel their power to do evil. Serbia might fight Turkey now as long as she fought in her war of independence, which took place when Europe was engaged with Napoleon I, and we should have no objections to see her incorporate with herself the countries lying between her and the Adriatic, thus bringing her within reach of the civilizing influences of commerce. At present she is thinly peopled, poor and inaccessible; and men's minds naturally revolt at the sight of the fine countries lying between the Adriatic and the Black Sea, remaining semi-barbarous and unproductive, while commerce is seeking new developments in the most distant regions of the earth. But war is not the best civiliser. If Serbia would devote herself to peaceful industry, she would make her way in the world much sooner than by becoming the cat's-paw of Russia.

It is gratifying to observe that, although the Government organs have not yet done with the "Pacific Scandal," they are beginning to be ashamed to mention it. Even the Globe is growing apologetic on the subject; yet we must protest that it is somewhat late in the day to tell its readers that it has "no desires to revive dead issues as they are called." What, in the name of goodness, has it been doing besides ever since Mr. Mackenzie took office? The strategy of the party has been consistent throughout and may be summed up in a few words—living on the sins and shortcomings of its predecessors. We have had "Pacific Scandal" on the half shell, raw, stewed, scolloped and fried. It seemed a strange way of vindicating the good name of the existing Government, but it appears to have been the only one open to the organs. What the people desire is a defence of the policy of the ins on its own merits, not a stale rehash of the delinquencies of the outs. They have ceased to care about the Cartier-Macdonald fiasco, the verdict of the country was pronounced upon it and the delinquencies of the ex-Ministers have been amply punished. People are heartily sick of the subject and would very much like it if the present Administration could contrive to stand on its own bottom. But, quoth the Globe, Sir John will not let it alone; he made a speech about it at Uxbridge, prior the South Ontario election. Did he? Pray is that the first time the unsavoury subject has been mentioned during the past year? We think not; but we do think that a semi religious journal should be more truthful. Then follows a passage which our readers may laugh at when they having nothing better to do—"The question is not a mere election cry (!) as the organs of the late Government seek to make it. It is one that needs to be viewed in all seriousness." The time for seriousness with the "Pacific Scandal" is long past and the farce is now going on.—National.
