THE HERALD.
RICHMOND HILL, DEC. 15, 1876.
PREPARING FOR WAR.

The Anti-Prohibitionists are putting on their armor and preparing for the battle that the signs of the times show will sooner or later be fought between them and those in favor of the total prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors.

All over the country Licensed Victuallers' Associations are being formed and the platform is being taken and meetings held, advocating the views of those in connection with these associations.

The other day a large mass meeting was held in Toronto, at which the Hon. Frank Smith presided, and Mr. James Fahey argued in favor of the rights of those who believed in man being allowed to sell or drink liquor if he thought proper to do so. No doubt the activity that has lately been shown by the friends of Prohibition, in getting the Dunkin Act passed wherever they can, is the cause of this opposition upon the part of those who favor the liquor dealer. They feel the time is at hand when the question will fairly be put before the people at the polls. The question of drink or no drink, in more ways than one, involves serious consequences; and perhaps those in favor of the Prohibition movement are going the surest way to work in having their views carry by putting the Dunkin Act to the people in every county.

We, as a public journalist, having for our subscribers all classes of the community, are not expected to shut our columns to the discussion of any question that may interest our readers, neither are we expected to endorse every correspondent's communication that may appear in our paper. Whilst we have the control of a journal, we shall at all times permit the insertion of correspondence, even supposing it may not agree with our ideas, so long as the same is written in language not offensive. We have many men of many minds in a community; some think Prohibition is the grand panacea for all the evils human flesh is heir to; whilst others, on the contrary, may, just as honestly, think otherwise; whilst all sides will agree that the intemperate use of any beverage is hurtful and wrong.

A document has been just issued by the Edinburgh School of Cookery, showing the progress which the movement has made, and the amounts contributed for its support. It is astonishing that within a few months the whole country has been infected with a sort of cooking enthusiasm. In every county, and almost every town, cookery classes have been established, and at these rich and poor have sat together as most docile listeners and learners. In Edinburgh alone the sum of £1316 8s 1d has been contributed, and in other places sums in proportion.

There has been a sort of Fenian scare on the Pacific. A despatch from Victoria says that fifty rounds of ammunition have been issued to the military, in anticipation of a raid, and that torpedoes are being prepared at the dockyards to repel the invaders.

The financial statement presented to the Quebec Legislature by the Finance Minister is very gratifying to the Province. It shows a total income for the year of $5,984,533; with an expenditure of $3,862,517; leaving a balance of $2,122,016.

The returns for the third quarter in the year, shows that in Scotland the number of births during the three months was unusually high, whilst the number of deaths was the lowest on record for twenty one years.

Communications.
LETTER NO. II.

To the future Conservative Member for East York, in the House of Commons.

DEAR SIR, — Allow me to present a few more thoughts on the Temperance movement, and then I have done.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that the evils of intemperance are all in turn acknowledged; let us look for a moment at the objections raised, first by the liquor seller and his friends, and next by the Government of the day, to the questions of the Dunkin Bill by law and that of Prohibition. It is, in the first place, objected by the Licensed Victualler that the Dunkin Act is an invasion of his rights as a citizen: having received his license to sell, he deems that he is thereby encouraged to purchase property, erect buildings suitable, fit up bars, etc. From the reign of Queen Anne down to the present, the British Government have certainly granted licenses to keepers of houses of entertainment and others, for the sale of ardent spirits, malt liquors, etc., on the special condition that they should be men of high moral character, and demanding that his character should be accredited by a clergyman of known standing. It is quite clear that even in those early times the danger attending this traffic were fully recognized.

This license was only granted from year to year, and the man receiving it are only in office under sufferance or good conduct, or the terms accorded to by the authorities.

The druggist has a license to sell poisonous drugs under a physician's order, but the moment that, on his own responsibility, he undertakes to retail opium, chloral, or drugs of this nature, to our wives, sons or daughters, he ceases to have rights, and society at once takes him by the throat, and his punishment is justly severe. Just so with the rum-seller; he at one time had, by right of his license, the privilege of selling ardent spirits to the people, under certain restrictions; but through the influence of an ever increasing avarice, he oversteps the boundary line allowed by the law, and proceeds to poison the multitude, to encourage the drinking habit in our young men, to establish a vitiated taste for stimulants in the more mature and aged; and we have the result in the destruction of homes, in the commission of murder and breaches against the whole criminal code, and the manufacture of pauperism and three-fourths of all the calamities that are daily occurring in our country. And yet while the drink is acknowledged to be the chief factor of all this category of evil, we find the principal actor in this human drama, having the impertinence to claim as a right, the privilege of making drunkards, thieves and malefactors of our sons and the future hope of Canada. Now, Sir, I deem that it is time that this business should be stopped, and that traffic which is proved as directly injuring the public and destroying human happiness, should be forever swept away from our country.

It is again objected that the Dunkin Bill, if it becomes law, will injure the farmer by destroying the market for barley. This objection is certainly childish in the extreme, and scarcely deserves a moment's notice. However, granting that it is right to sow barley and cultivate it as one of our chief agricultural products; we find that according to the returns of barley grown and exported last year, that ninety-five out of every hundred bushels went across the borders, being sold to a foreign market.

It is also stated as an objection to the Dunkin Bill being carried into effect in this county, that our taxes will be increased when licenses are no longer issued. In this statement there is both truth and falsehood involved; for as the average sums raised in the different municipalities would scarcely amount to four hundred dollars, and, as in East and West York, nearly if not quite that sum has been collected in fines and penalties under the Crock's Act; yet on the other hand, if not one dollar were collected under this heading as an offset, yet the whole direct loss to each citizen, when apportioned, would not amount to one cent a head, or one fourth of a cent in the $100 taxable property of each municipality. In the language of the poet, "breathes there a man with soul so dead," who would not willingly pay this for the salvation of his country from this great curse; if there is one such to be found, let me inform him that last year he paid his share of nearly $1000 for pauperism the natural offspring of the drunkard's drink.

Again, Sir, we hear it charged that if the Dunkin Act should become universally adopted in this country, the revenue will thereby be seriously affected, and the Government will have to resort to direct taxation to remedy the apparent defalcation. We have I believe sir, the authority of one of England's greatest statesmen, late Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Stafford Northcote, for saying that if Prohibition were carried tomorrow there need be no fears for the revenue of that country. For as the people become more temperate they also accumulate more wealth, and acquiring tastes of a refined and cultivated order, this naturally establishes an increased demand for the luxuries of life, and just in proportion to the decreased consumption of intoxicants. But, let us look for a moment to the purposes to which revenue is usually devoted, as for example, to support the courts of law and equity; the trial and care of criminals; the erection of jails, prisons and penitentiaries, and worse still, and far a more horrible necessity asylums for the insane.

Both judge and jury tell us that nine-tenths of the crime brought before them arises from the drunkard's drink. It appears then to me, as well I judge to every thoughtful mind, that if the cause of all this evil were removed, this enormous chain of expenses would in great part at least be lifted from our land. And, last of all the rum-seller admitting the truth of the arguments advanced; and admitting that the letter of law is against him, yet do we find him falling back on that antiquated citadel of his hopes the court of equity. He says, I am a respectable old gentleman; I am, received thousands of years old; I have, received a certain amount of encouragement from both people and the Government, to invest my money in this business, and in view of Prohibition becoming the new order of things. I have, rights that deserve to be considered, very well, let us suppose the scales of justice suspended. In a box fastened to one end of the beam, let us place Mr. Landlord with his buxom wife, one dozen children and all his gains through a life of 20 years in the traffic; to the other end of the beam we also attach a box, but, this must be a much larger one, for society must here be represented in the loss of one hundred citizens, whose bones rattling in the bottom have been collected, as they were beached on the shore of intemperance. Here also, will be found the widows and orphans of these men, huddled together in gaunt ragged want, by the drink he sold their fathers; and still we notice clinging to its sides the dull idiot or playing wild antics about the suspenders, the madly insane, whose wild and eldritch screeches mingled with fiendish laughter is adding interest to the scene. But, look at the landlords end of the beam, is high up now; the weight of wretchedness in the other box has raised him up in mid air, where we may now see him straining his scared eye-balls at the mouth of the dark pit beyond, from whose orifice the fumes of hell are issuing with the darkly blasphemous curse, of the one hundred damned souls which his drink,—but hark, he cries enough—while for the present, I bid you good night.

DUNKIN.

As all who frequent any place of worship, however they may differ from the doctrines there delivered, are expected to comport themselves with seriousness and gravity, so in religious controversies, ridicule ought never to be resorted to on either side; whenever a jest is introduced on such a subject, it is indisputably out of its place, and ridicule, thus employed so far from being a test of truth, is the surest test of error in those who on such an occasion can stoop to have recourse unto it.

The official statement of the national debt of the United States on the 1st inst., shows the debt to be $2,089,336,099, being an increase for the month of $457,000.
