The British Elections.

The result of the elections in Great Britain and Ireland has surprised the world. Even the most sanguine Liberal never expected such a reversal will be in progress before two years. In addition to this, they are carrying out the views of the country in endeavoring to develop our far West, and they have 100 miles of the road west of Winnipeg under contract. They have also made arrangements for further Railway extension, opening up that country of unexampled fertility, which we hear in the present year is likely to receive so large an emigration. In regard to that, I may say that the leader of the Opposition sneered at the leader of the Government, on account of the interview he recently had with the English Premier. He said, I think that from what fell from Lord Beaconsfield, he thought his ear had been gained by some wandering vagrant. This was not perhaps a respectful way of speaking of the leader of either Government. That, however, matters not, all I have to say, is, that having English connections myself, and being in correspondence with that country through them, I have had letters from there, stating that there has been more talk about Canada of a favorable character since Sir John A Macdonald's visit there, and since his interview with Lord Beaconsfield, than there has been for the last twenty years; that the country has grown in favor, and that there is going to be an emigration from England to this country, not of men utterly with-out means as in ordinary immigration, but of persons more or less possessed of money, which will be of great advantage to the Dominion. That is an advantage which at any rate has grown out of the interview between the leader of our Government and Lord Beaconsfield. There is a remark that I meant to have noticed before, that fell from the late Minister of Finance. In discussing this question he said in effect that it was not an advantage to a country that the exports should be larger than the imports. It appears to me that no greater mistake could be made than that. If we can so nourish and cherish our own manufactures that we produce to a large extent what we want, and it so happens that we import say $50,000.000 in a year, and we The entertainment was brought to a close at a seasonable hour.

In conclusion, I would say this, sir, that if we are to make Canada a country for ourselves; country of which we shall be justly proud. If we are to build up this great confederation into the nation it deserves to be, rich as it is with every element of National wealth, peopled with a people at least, as intelligent as any on the face of And about 13 acres of land, situated on the by the exercise of patriotic feelings. There must be a sinking and abandonment of ing Orchard, Well, &c., miserable party, and Provincial distinctions and differences. There must be a little giving away of one to another in a community like this just as in a family of individuals, there must be mutual concessions to produce mutual happiness and prosperity. The vote in support of those resolutions was one of the most remarkable votes that ever took place in the history of nations In this Chamber we had a large number of men supporting the Government on its general Policy, but with their diverse interests tearing them apart in various ways. At the formulation and shaping of this Policy, they fought and contended for their various interests day after day, as the discussion were along, each trying to get this and that advantage for the various communities to which they belonged, and after having tried by every legitimate means to put the matter in the best shape they could they were satisfied to vote as one man, and gave effect to a tariff conceived and prepared for the good of the whole. I would say, that he is no good friend to his country, who is continually going about, hoping to reach some petty Party advantage by stirring up one Province against unother. We cannot have such a Confederation as we ought to have, it the Maritime Provinces will not give way a little to Ontario and Quebec, if tario and Quebec will not yield a little to the Maritime Provinces. There must be a general desire to put a side little difficulties in order to work out a scheme like this, for the benefit of all, because it is a grand scheme, and one that deserves not only weightiest consideration of this House, but of the whole country. I believe it is now being welded together so as to make a Confederation of which we can all be proud. Let us as far as we can for the purpose of building up a great nation here in this Western World.
