A Short Lived Alliance.

An exchange has some comments on the short lived alliance that apparently M. Lord Saliebury was from the first at gether with the Rectory is worth more than least consistent, and has been noted, if a hundred thousand dollars. It consists of for anything, for his high Tory principles. His mental and political bent may be guessed from an incident growing but of Disraeli's career. When Mr. Disraeli came to the front as the Conservative is a figure of our ford, and the one in the leader and his party new lease of life by opposite end is what is known as a rore the enunciation of the principles of the window The pupil and lecturn are brass, the enunciation of the principles of the new Tory wing, Lord Salisbury denounced this departure and charged its promoter with being a political adventurer. Gladstone began his political career a Conservative, and became a Liberal later in life; Disraeli was first a Radical, and then espoused the Tory party : but Salisbury never had any such indiscretions to pine over or atone for and therefore can not be said to have any strong sympathies with the masses of the British people. He served in Parliament from 1853 to 1867, when he was called to the House of Lords on the death of his father. With all his opposition and avowed antagonism to Mr. Disraeli, he took office under that prince of British po-litical craftsmen in 1874. His course in 1876 as Special Embassador at Constantinople is charged largely with facilitating the Turco-Russian War. Two years later, as the head of the foreign office, he mastered the details with a rapidity unexampled in the legends of Parliament. He came under Disraeli's influence so far as that it was said that the once deepised commoner was the only man in the four Kingdoms could make him pliant and practical. Lord Salisbury's strength is like his party's power, it lies in his foreign policy. Our Brooklyn Letter. (For the HERALD) Albany is a city of about two bundred housand inhabitants ; it is prettily situated on the benks of the Hudson, and has some very fine buildings, public and private. For ome time past it has been busy celebrating the centennial of its incorporation ; and here have been the usual speeches. toasts, rocessions, rush, crowd. bustle, noise, acidents, &c., &c. We start for New York, and the tailway runs along by the bank of the river. Every turn in the road gives the traveller a view of some bold headland, or secluded dell, or thriving town or quiet vil-lage ; whilst the river itself, shining in the sunlight, and bearing on its bosom yachts and steamers, as well as many another exists between the English Tories and craft, recalls to mind the charming descrip-the Liberal Unionists The conduct of tion given of it by Cooper in one of his On the train one meets people from many a clime, from Norway and Sweden, from France and Germany, from Great Britain and Ireland, who are taking advantage of the cheap trips this season to see once more the land of their nativity. Your correspondent, in obsting with one of them, learned that he had left his mother's home in Kerry county, Ireland, nearly thirty years ago; that he had succeeded in his business, that of a builder, beyond his most sanguine expectations ; that, after a corresby the very men who before sustained head from his mother, ; and that he w a him. The choir consists of about forty men and boys, surpliced, and they sing with much taste and expression. Of course yes will fancy from all this that St. John's is what is commonly called High ; but you were never more mis taken, for the services are quite as plain as those at St. Mary's, Richmond Hill ; in fact, in some respects they are plainer.
