

A REMARKABLE SEPARATION.
Voluntary Parting After Fourteen Years of Happy Married Life.

A Halifax despatch says: One of the most extraordinary social sensations ever known in Halifax came to the surface to-day, when Prof. Sumichrast separated from the woman to whom he had been married fourteen years because he did not believe that in the sight of God he is her husband. Prof. Sumichrast is the most cultured literate and linguist in this part of Canada. He was formerly Professor of Modern Languages in King's College, Windsor. Subsequently, he was editor of the Halifax newspaper, and for some years he has been Principal of the Girton House, where the sons and daughters of the aristocracy of Halifax finish their education. This school is supervised by Bishop Binney and the leading men in his diocese.

Fourteen years ago Mr. Sumichrast fell in love with the handsome young widow of Charles Almon, a lieutenant in the Royal British Artillery and son of a wealthy Nova Scotia politician. When M. B. Almon died he left his son's widow a fortune of $100,000. Prof. Sumichrast, who told her that when youth he had married a dashing French girl in his Hungarian home. Their life had been an unhappy one. They were divorced, he had never heard from her since, and he believed she was dead, but she always divorced perfectly happy. Mr. Almon was satisfied and married M. Sumichrast. Years ago Prof. H. Y. Hind, the British expert witness before the Fishery Commission, held a professor's chair in King's College. He became friendly with Sumichrast, and found out all about his life. At a recent meeting of the church synod radical differences of opinion sprang up between Bishop Binney and Prof. Sumichrast and Hind, were continued at the Governing Board of King's College, of which Almon was a member. Prof. Sumichrast employed an Edinburgh lawyer to ferret out the history of Sumichrast before he came to Canada, and the whereabouts of his first wife. It was found that she had married a French officer and is now living in Algiers. Prof. Sumichrast addressed a circular to all the Episcopal clergymen of the diocese, declaring that Bishop Binney was backing up Prof. Sumichrast, a man whom he knew for years had been living with a woman not his wife in the eyes of the Church. This produced a crisis.

When Bishop Binney called his attention to Hind's attack he acknowledged that, seeing that his first wife, whom he had for long years thought dead, was still living, in the eyes of the Church, his marriage was unlawful, and he immediately desired to separate from wife No. 2 and regard wife No. 1, living with the French officers in Algiers, as his only lawful spouse. He went home and communicated his resolve to the woman with whom he had lived happily for fourteen years. The blow fell upon her with crushing effect, but like a heroine she agreed that it was the only thing they could honorably do, and she immediately left her home and sought the protection of Rev. F. H. Murray, her pastor, at whose house she now is.

BRITISH FEDERATION.

Despatch to the Colonies Calling for a Conference on the Subject.

A London cable says: Right Hon. Edward Stanhope, Colonial Secretary, has sent a despatch to the Governors of colonies responsible for the government of a circular to the Governors of colonies not possessing that form of government, announcing the Queen's summons to a conference to be held here next spring to discuss the subject of Imperial Federation. In the opinion of the Government a system of defence should be established throughout the Empire; but no new project, entailing heavy expenditure, is contemplated. Postal and telegraph service, second only in importance to the question just referred to, needs consideration in connection with the requirements of every part of the Empire. The Colonial Secretary deprecates the discussion of any scheme for the political federation of the Empire until colonial opinion has been ascertained. The proposed conference will be purely consultative, and will consist of the Agent-General and one public man from each colony, the Colonial Secretary presiding.

FUNERAL AND WEDDING.

A Very Romantic Episode Which Took Place in Ottawa.

An Ottawa despatch says: An extremely romantic marriage which took place yesterday furnishes subject matter for all the young people of the city. The facts are briefly these: Miss Elizabeth King, of Rochesterville, a maiden lady, 82 years of age, was on her way to a young man, who possessed considerable wealth, estimated at about $100,000, principally in real estate securities. In her will she left it all conditionally to Miss Christie King, a young lady of 19, who had lived with her as companion, and who had been a young man of 24, who had had considerable attention to Miss Christie and had won the favor of the old lady. The condition was that the young couple should be married to each other the day the testatrix was buried. The burial took place at 3 o'clock yesterday, and at the marriage ceremony was celebrated in the house of recent mourning. The happy groom is the son of Hugh Allan, retail dry goods merchant.

A RACE OF PIGMIES.

Explorer Wolf Finds a Horde of Dwarfs in Africa.

A Brussels cablegram says: The explorer Ludwig Wolf, just returned from the Congo, has been interviewed by your correspondent and reports having met in the Sankou region many tribes of dwarfs, generally measuring less than four feet, and with short and woolly hair. They live by hunting and are wonderfully agile and good-tempered. Many thousands of them are dispersed over this wild region and are known under the name of Batonas. They mix very little with the full-grown population. This, says Wolf, confirms the ancient conjectures of Herodotus and Aristotle as to the existence of a race of pigmies in Africa. "These African Lilliputians received me very hospitably," said Mr. Wolf.

Meeting of Shortborn Breeders.

A Gaelic despatch says: A meeting of breeders of shortborns was held in the City Hall on Wednesday night, nearly 100 being present, to discuss the desirability of modifying the present standing of the Dominion Shortborn herd book so as to admit of a considerable number of cattle being recorded in the new book which are not now entered. The discussion lasted two hours and a half, and ended in a committee, composed of the following gentlemen, being appointed to meet the Board at the next annual meeting: Messrs. W. G. Pettit, Robt. McQueen, Daniel Talbot, Thos. Waters, Wm. Donaldson, James Laidlaw and James G. Wright.

While a boy named Oliver Allen was skating on the ice on Lake Champlain, N.Y., and pushing a cutter occupied by two children named Edith and Ralph Flannery, aged 12 and 5 respectively, the ice gave away and all three were drowned.

The man who frequents the pawnbroker's generally goes out on three balls.

VOL. XVIII.

RICHMOND HILL THURSDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1886.

WHOLE NO. 1,482 NO. 30.

FIELD MARSHAL VON MOLTKE.

Excitement in the Reichstag Over the Old General's Impressive Language.

A Berlin cablegram of Saturday's date says: The gloomy hints thrown out by the German Minister for War in the Reichstag yesterday were meant to make and have a deep impression. Had they stood alone they might have been explained by tactical causes. To-day, however, they were followed by a declaration of the veteran Von Moltke, uttered with an emphasis rarely used except at great critical moments.

The scene in the Reichstag was striking. Herr von Windhorst, speaking in the name of the Centre, had protested that his followers were patriots filled with devotion, and though declaring he thought the Minister for War took too dark a view of the situation, had declared his willingness to give the Army Bill final consideration, when the old Field Marshal rose.

Standing in the middle of the House he turned toward the little ultramontane leader, while the deputies crowded thickly round him, and holding a roll of paper in his hand began to speak.

"There was dead silence for a time, but cheers rang out when, referring to France, he said: 'So long as public opinion there demands a vigorous policy, and if-necked bitterness for the restoration of the provinces regained with so much bloodshed, so long must Germany repeat that she will shed her last drop of blood in holding and defending her conquests.'

Let us not forget," continued the veteran, amid breathless excitement, "that the security—even the existence—of great nations depends on their might; that, above all, the greatest resources for the world's safety of Germany lie in the excellence of her army."

The Minister in France, coming at this moment, is naturally watched here with the keenest interest. The advent of Clemenceau to power just now might have grave consequences.

A DEVASTATING STORM.

Dreadful Gale on the British Coast—Loss of Life and Property.

A last (Wednesday) night's London cable says: A terrible gale, accompanied by lightning and thunder, prevailed last night and this morning in the southern counties of England and in the Channel, where a number of ships were wrecked. At Brighton much damage was done to property. Throughout the United Kingdom rain and hail fell. The storm caused widespread disaster. In Scotland there was also a heavy fall of snow. The gale abated somewhat during the day time, but raged with increased violence during the night over the whole Kingdom. In the west of Ireland the storm was terrific. Steamers are delaying in making Queenstown, and all the harbors are filled with shipping. The high tide at Limerick is flooding the warehouses on the water front, and at Armagh the spinning mills have been stopped by floods. Damage to property, accidents, and some cases of houses being set on fire by lightning are reported from all parts of the Kingdom. A French vessel, the Arctique, was wrecked, and six persons were drowned. On the Danish coast many vessels have been wrecked. Four ships struck on the Elnor breakwater. The gale was of unprecedented violence. At Liverpool and on the Isle of Man the barometer fell to the lowest point in the memory of man. The storm is now passing to the eastward of Scotland. Telegraphic communication on the Continent is greatly interrupted. Heavy damage was done at most of the seaside holiday resorts, where trees and other property were blown away by falling tiles and chimneys. It is feared there has been a great loss of life. The papers had no telegram from the Continent last night.

ATTACKED BY AN EAGLE.

Two Men Have a Battle with an Enormous Bird of Freedom.

A Minneapolis, Minn., despatch says: Prof. W. F. Carr and Samuel Curtis, who were surveying on Nicolet avenue, near the Washburn Home, were attacked yesterday afternoon by a large eagle. The bird dropped down like a bullet, and knocking Curtis' cap from his head, seized him by the throat. Carr caught up a crowbar, and for a few minutes defended himself in an unequal combat, calling lustily for his companion. Prof. Carr coming up, the savage bird turned upon him, caught him by the leg, threw him into the air, and then sinking his talons in the fleshy part of his leg, inflicted a serious wound.

The bird then mounted to the collar of the unfortunate man and seemed determined to bear him away bodily, but just as he was about to do so, Carr, with his united efforts the bird of liberty was finally conquered and securely pinioned. It was found that his wings measured nine feet ten inches from tip to tip, and his talons were four inches long.

The capture of the eagle goes far to explain the fact that lately the farmers near the Washburn Home have missed sundry pigs and sheep.

One of the Campbells.

I notice a remark that Lady Colin Campbell was so proud of her connection with the Argylls that she wore, at one of the Queen's drawing-rooms, a dress on which were emblazoned the Campbell arms. This is incorrect. Lady Colin never wore any such dress at a drawing-room. The person who wore it was Lady Archibald Campbell, her sister-in-law. Lady "Archie" is very sensitive about this wonderful gown of hers was an artistic adaptation to modern ideas of a medieval costume. On it not only were the Campbell arms worked, but those of her own family, the Callanders of Craigforth, which, though it may not date back to 1180, was the first MacCallum More was knighted, is still an old family. By the way, Lady Colin Campbell's father is a lineal descendant of Col. Blood who had a weakness for Crown diamonds in the time of James II.—York Town Topics.

A Lost Art.

Customer (to photographer)—I don't think the picture does me justice. Photographer—My dear sir, if photographing did justice to every one who has his picture taken the art would soon grow unpopular.—Harpur's Bazar.

Rev. Edward White, who has been astonishing the London religious public by his merchants' lectures on the animals of Scripture, has been on a visit to his old charge in Hereford, where he has given a fresh illustration of his inventive faculty by an able lecture on "Number in Nature as Evidence of Creative Intelligence."

LORD COLIN IN THE BOX.

Both Lord and Lady Tarr'd With the Same Stick.

SOME SENSATIONAL STATEMENTS.

Counsel for the Duke of Marlborough and Lord Blandford

DENY ANY IMPROPRIETY WITH HER.

A last (Wednesday) night's London cable says: The trial of the Lord Campbell divorce case was resumed to-day, Lord Colin Campbell continuing his testimony. Previous to the resumption of Lord Colin's examination Lady Colin's counsel were informed by the judge that she had refused to order Lord Colin to give further security for his wife's costs.

Lord Colin Campbell testified that Lady Colin had admitted to him that in July, 1883, while he was ill, she had received two or three letters from the Duke of Marlborough, and had also received a number of letters from Gen. Butler. These letters, however, she refused to show to the witness, although requested to do so. Upon being pressed for an answer by the judge, Lord Colin said he was sure that at the time he had also asked Lady Colin if she had brought anybody home with her from the ball which she had attended on the previous night, and that her ladyship had denied bringing anybody with her.

Here Mr. Blood called his father, arose in court, and shaking his fist in the witness' face, said: "In making these infamous charges against your wife it's not the first time that you have lied." Mr. Blood was sharply reprimanded by the judge.

Lord Colin Campbell, resuming, said that on the occasion of his asking Lady Campbell to show him the letters, she said to him that unless he signed a paper before she left the room, binding him to live apart from her, she would go to the Excitorer's office. The witness refused to be coerced or intimidated into signing such a paper, and asked Lady Miles, who was present, to go with him to another room, which she did.

After a conversation with Lady Miles witness returned with her to hold a family council with Lady Colin to whom Lady Miles said: "Colin desires me to say that he has made no charges against his wife." The witness then expressed to his wife his willingness to submit the condition of his health to a medical commission, and agreed to the result, which was to be a medical commission to accept her conditions. But he stipulated that Lady Colin must abandon her correspondence with the Duke of Marlborough. Lady Colin, witness said, would not agree to this, and referred to the witness as "a man who would not refuse to see him alone thereafter. Witness denied that he had been guilty of adultery with Mary Watson, and testified that he had taken action looking to his wife's arrest in Paris under the advice of his solicitor.

Upon cross-examination Lord Colin said he had never studied surgery, but had attended lectures on gynecology and anatomy in the College of Surgeons, and possessed sufficient knowledge of the former science to be able to write to Lady Colin Campbell that she had a miscarriage. Witness said his first illness occurred in 1872. He was afterwards attacked by a similar illness in 1876, which he did not fully recover from until 1884, when he became perfectly well. Witness admitted the trial of his wife's limited divorce case in 1884, and recollected that a juror then asked him to say whether he had suffered from any disease capable of being communicated to his wife. He also heard his counsel say that there was not a single charge of any kind against Lady Colin Campbell. Ellen Brown and Mrs. Duffy, witness said, had told him in July, 1883, what they would testify to, and witness believed that their statements had been true, and that he was often reproached with his wife about taxing her strength. When asked if Lady Colin had ever lied to him, witness said she had often "used deception." Lady C. responded with witness regularly after she left him in 1883 until the final rupture between them. He had kept only one of the letters she had written during that time, which was dated in December, 1883. The letter began: "Darling Boy," and was signed "Your Arab." Witness admitted saying at the previous trial that he had told his wife to take precautionary remedies to prevent her having children. (Sensation.) Lord Colin testified that his means were limited, and that Lady Colin had provided £1,000 to furnish the house he had occupied. Lady Colin had bought the furniture and worked at the house herself. Witness admitted that he had twice been afflicted with an infectious disease, the first time in 1870. The case was then adjourned.

News from Crowned Heads.

The Prince of Wales has set the fashion of wearing wide and curly brimmed hats in England.

Queen Marie, mother of Bavaria's two lunatic kings, visited Otto the other day, but he failed to recognize her.

Prince Carl of Sweden is such a beauty that his photograph is found on every toilet article used by Stockholm women.

Ex-Rhodie Island Fashas of Egypt has been arrested by the British Consul at Alexandria, Holland, and his health, which has been failing lately.

The King of Holland is an admirer of American institutions. He heats his palace at Amsterdam with an American base-burner coal stove, and he has his eye on a tin egg poacher.

Queen Christina of Spain has won for herself the enthusiasm of the people by dramatic performances in the palace theatre. The other day "Eugenie" was performed, the Crown Prince executing the role of the Prince of Denmark and his sister, Princess Alexandra, that of Ophelia.

The Emperor of Morocco is a great lover of velocipedes, only the royal feet must not touch the treadle. He has slaves for this purpose when he goes out for his rambles in the palace grounds. He has just ordered a velocipede broad enough to hold a comfortable bed, on which His Majesty reposes while his slaves take the exercise.

He Walked Too Long.

"What do you think of such a man as Jones?" demanded Smith as he met an acquaintance on the street. "I dunno—why?" "I've known him for twenty years, and yet when I wanted to borrow $10 he demanded security!" "Ah! you should have struck him, nineteen years ago!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE CAMPBELL SCANDAL.

Lady Colin's Letter to the Duke of Argyle.

WHY SHE DID NOT LIKE HER LORD.

A London cablegram says: On the cross-examination the following correspondence was read amid the most profound silence and attention in the court:

"No. 79 CADOGAN PLACE, S.W., August 15th, 1883."

"MY DEAR DUKE,—As, no doubt, you will soon be leaving town, and as it is not likely I shall see you before you go, I hope you will not think it ill-befitting that I, as your daughter-in-law, should give you some explanation, painful as it may be to both of us, of the causes which have led to the present deplorable state of affairs between Colin and myself.

"He has told me plainly that he will separate from me unless I consent to cohabit with him, and he persists in this decision. In justice to myself I cannot consent to a private separation. If we are to separate, the reasons for my refusal to cohabit with him as his wife must be known openly.

BITTER SARCASM.

"Girls have illusions, and to be first initiated into the mysteries of matrimony by being given a cutting from a doctor's letter in which I was recommended as a salutary prescription—would shock any girl in love with the man who thus treated her. Throughout, this idea of my usefulness seems to have been the principal one.

"If I tried to interest him in anything I had seen or heard, if I tried of my own accord to do some little thing to please him, all my efforts were met with absolute intolerance; but if any trifles put him out I was the scapegoat.

"Many times, about such trifles as my wearing a linen collar or a serge dress, he has sworn at me and ordered me to leave the house, as if I were a servant, and this before we had been married a month. His treatment, his curses alone, would have been enough to arouse most women.

SIGNS OF ILL TEMPER.

"With regard to his women servants, I was made into a sort of go-between. When he constantly ill-treated them, even to the extent of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he was in the mood of striking them and knocking them down, I was sent for to soothe and console them, so as to try and persuade them to excuse his behavior and return to him. I have had to leave my room at night and go and sit with the nurse for hours, with my arms round her, when she was sobbing from his personal violence, and make excuses for him in every way I could imagine. Then, after one of these outbursts, he would think nothing too good for these women, and on one occasion, when he