The gentleman comes highly recommended, and all should go to hear him. Tickets 25 cents. See what the papers say of him; "There has not been on the Chautauque platform this year so remarkable a man as John R. Clark, nor has there been given so unique and individual an address. He held the crowd with a firm hand from the beginning to the close, and many of his good hits were greeted with tremendous applause. His theme "To and fro in London" gave him a wide range of subjects on which to treat, and he handled his material with the skill of an experienced workman. His address is easy and cogent; his flow of language abundant, and at all times was he master of himself and his subject. His lecture was a combination of History, Travel, Wit, Humor, and Experience, all tinged with the Religion and Philosophy of life."—Assevely Herald. Other papers speak in the same favorable strain.

Great bargains at the Concrete in Tea Sets, plates, Cups and Saucers to make room for a large direct importation, now just to hand.

Vic. Sq. Items.

A sudden gloom was cast over our village the early part of this month, by the death of our late esteemed citizen, Mr. Wm. Boynton. A grand Musical Festival was held at the residence of Miss Fierheller, on Saturday, the 16th inst. The programme of the evening consisted chiefly of music by her pupils, of which were present about forty. Several songs were well sung, speeches were delivered, and all who spoke commended Miss Fierheller on the way she was using her musical talent. Over a hundred friends and scholars were present who enjoyed the musical treat as well as a most luxurious repast. Mr. W. A. McCague, of the Toronto Post Office department has been spending a few weeks among his friends here. He still remains his healthful appearance. Farmer George has his mansion completed, and many of us are waiting anxiously to join with him and his good lady in the housewarming. Mr. S. M. Brown has been making considerable improvements on his new purchase which is adding largely to the looks of the place. The friends of the Methodist church intend moving and enlarging their sheds as soon as convenient. The heavy wind storm last Thursday night damaged a large amount of the winter apples in this neighborhood. The late potatoes are a good crop this year; the rains in the latter part of the season were in their favor.

You can buy an all wool gent's Tweed Pants at $1.55 and an all wool Tweed suit for $6.00 at The Concrete.

Welcomed Home.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Patterson arrived home on Saturday evening from Eureka Springs, Ark., where they were married on Oct. 6th. The employees of the Patterson Works, taking the first opportunity to welcome Mr. Patterson back, gathered on Monday evening to perform a pleasant office in the presentation of a handsome silver tea service to the newly married couple. When Mr. Patterson arrived on the scene he was greeted with a hearty cheer. Mr. D. C. Page, after calling the assembly to order, proceeded immediately with the business in hand, by addressing Mr. Patterson, on behalf of the employees, as follows:

RESPECTED SIR.—We have requested your presence on this occasion to give us an opportunity of offering a slight tribute to the many happy touches of character with which we have learned to associate your name and person. When it became known that you had taken a brief respite from the cares of business to become a party to the felicitous event which has lately transpired in your career, it occurred spontaneously to the employees of these works that this would be a propitious moment to evince in some tangible form the esteem in which you are held by all who have been fortunate enough to have daily intercourse with you. It is within the power of some here to recall the steps of your history from childhood up; and it is gratifying to them to know from the intimacy of daily association, that the admirable disposition of the child has not been stunted in the development of the man. We have no desire to indulge in fickle applause, for such we are aware is quite foreign to your taste; but we also know that speech is too frail to convey a proper expression of those feelings evoked by certain humane qualities which, on account of the rarity with which we meet them, affect us the more when they are brought before our notice. The frequency with which people meet through mutual commerce, gives ample opportunity for the interchange of kind civilities. In such relations you have ever acted a manly part; and in everything that concerned the happiness and ease of others you have been the soul of courtesy. With a large and liberal understanding of right conduct between man and man, frankness and a courageous nature have in you been inseparably blended; and recognizing the force of the old saw, "A gentleman is a gentleman on all occasions," you have never been guilty of discriminating between the weak and the strong. Of your sympathy with others and geniality towards all, we have had many proofs; and as these are rare essences in human nature we have keenly appreciated them in you. It was said by one of the old philosophers that man is a social animal. We are ready sometimes to believe that he had but imperfectly sounded the common heart. It is pleasant, however, occasionally to chance on a lively illustration of its truth, and you certainly have indicated the saying in the memory of us all. In those excellencies of conduct which, in human estimation, go so largely to make the perfection of manly decorum, kindness, sensitiveness for the interest of others, unselfishness to reason and politeness to please, grand unwritten laws without which society must lose its greatest charm, we shall always think of you as "Wearing the white flower of a blameless life." We are conscious that "Words like nature, half reveal, and half conceal the soul within;" and while we could wish that we have in some measure conveyed to you the respect and good-will we bear you, we must trust to your own insight and to the feelings of others to supply what we have failed to express. As a reminder in later life of this occasion of welcome to yourself, and through you to your wife, we beg you to accept this gift. If amid the many domestic pleasures which we wish and anticipate for your future, the singing of the "motherly tea-pot" may recall any pleasant reminiscences of to-day, we shall esteem ourselves happy indeed in the recollection.

At this juncture, Mr. George Derry uncovered the gift, which produced a very pretty effect. Mr. A. S. Patterson then responded in the following words:

MR. PAGE & GENTLEMEN.—On behalf of Mrs. Patterson and myself I tender you our very sincere thanks for this most beautiful and acceptable present you have so kindly made us the recipients of, and for the many kind wishes you have so earnestly expressed for our future happiness and welfare. I also thank you, gentlemen, for the very many flattering remarks of esteem you have bestowed me worthy of, but I am afraid you have been too willing to accept as favors from me what were only the carrying out and fulfilling of the expressed wishes and instructions of both my respected uncle and father, that all those who in any capacity came between them and their employees, or between them and their patrons, should be actuated only by the principles of courtesy, honesty and justice. There are moments in most of our lives when mingled gratitude and surprise so completely fill us that we are unable to give utterance to the thoughts that are uppermost in our minds. Such, gentlemen, is the position in which I am now placed, and I cannot in the least degree express the deep feeling of gratitude and pleasure your great and unexpected kindness has given me, but I assure you it will ever be my honest endeavor and highest ambition as far as in my power to show you that I most sincerely appreciate all that you have done for me and mine. It is unnecessary to say more. All I can now do is to thank you, and I do so most heartily and sincerely, and I extend to you one and all a most cordial welcome both to our home here and to the new one we soon hope to make in Woodstock.

"He's a Jolly Good Fellow" was struck up and caught by the voices of all present, who, after giving three cheers for the bride, separated with the liveliest good feeling towards the hero of the occasion.

Later on in the evening the Richmond Hill Band arrived, and serenaded the young couple in Orthodox style. After discoursing a few lively airs they were entertained in a cordial and substantial manner by the young host and hostess, and a very pleasant day was joyously closed with "God Save the Queen."

Agreeable to the spirit of welcome which seemed to be the order of the day, the Teste Cornet Band, on Tuesday evening, paid their respects to Mr. and Mrs. Patterson with a few finely executed numbers, appropriately playing as a finale the stirring strains of "Yankee Doodle," in compliment to the bride.
