Aurora.
From our own Correspondent.
Bond & Son, who retired from mercantile pursuits last fall, have opened out again in their old stand on Wellington St.

H. J. Charles has sold his carriage manufacturing business to R. Nelson & Bro.
Two public meetings have been held in Aurora since the late fire to devise some plan of better fire protection. Various methods were brought forward, but as yet none of them adopted.

Building operations are being carried on lively. No less than twenty houses are at present under construction.
The Methodists of this place expect to have this appointment made into a station at the next conference, and Rev. J.
A. Rankin their pastor.

Seeding among farmers is well advanced, some few having finished.

bowels, cramp, colic, chills or summer complaint. 25c All druggists.

Cedarville
From an occasional Correspondent.
This place is situated about two miles from Bond's Lake, and is surrounded by one of the finest farming vicinities in Markham. It has an abundant supply of fresh spring water, and was formerly much sought by fishers on account of the delicious speckled trout which then abounded in the streams of the surrounding locality. Close at hand is a favorite place of hunters, which, however, is becoming somewhat inferior for this purpose, on account of the strong strides of agriculture. There are in this neighborhood springs which may, in the near future, compete with the noted Hawthorne Springs of Thornhill. It is said that in this place a small quantity of gold dust has been discovered by an American prospector. Thus we are in the midst of what, perhaps, will yet become a great place.

Things seem to be on the move, and seeding is going on.
Mr. James Cosgrove, having some time ago purchased the farm on which Mr.
Lackey is living, has been making great preparations towards running things on an independent scale. About two weeks ago he took the important step of getting a partner in life, which, I believe all will admit, is among the first requisites. May they live a long and happy life is the wish of all.

As might be expected where the matrimonial fever is strong, there is once in a while a excuse for a charivari. This was taken advantage of by a large crowd that assembled on Monday evening last and marched to the residence of Mr. J.
C., who has been but lately joined to his bride by the ties of matrimony. Having arrived at their destination at about half-past eight o'clock, they, fully equipped with guns and a variety of musical instruments, at once proceeded to charivari the happy pair. The salute commenced by the discharge of about a dozen guns in succession, followed by the sounds of various instruments and cheers from the crowd. This was repeated again and again, but alas! all within seemed dead, except that now and then the curtain, as it life had been given to them, were seen to turn gently back, apparently in obedience to some higher authority on the inside. On one occasion a face, in all appearance that of a human being, was seen before the window, viewing the surroundings, but this form of life also quickly disappeared. Having endeavored in vain to induce the bridegroom at least to make an appearance and show them the charming bride, they departed to their several homes, after a stay of six hours, during which about one hundred and fifty discharges of fire-arms were made.

Although much disappointed they, having taken the precaution to watch the place, had the great satisfaction of knowing that it was not forsaken, and that the treatment which they received was wilfully directed towards them. Some thanks may also be given to the two parties (sneaks in the dark) who seemed rather anxious to give the alarm, and in so doing put the couple on the alert before the crowd had reached the place, consequently the light was quickly banished, and, as it would appear, the inhabitants of the house sincerely believed that they had played a noble part, and could lead all to think that the sought-for parties were absent. However, such was not the effect, and if their fond delight is music, they received a great treat, and it would be advisable for other lovers of this fine art to do likewise, if such an opportunity is presented to them. It is an easy task, the only trick about it being to give those outside a good glance through the blinds and then blow out the light and pretend absence. The necessary precautions have then been taken and a good uproar may be expected.

O. J., deeply consider whether or not you gave your friends a fitting reception, and at your own convenience treat them as you may deem properly. They certainly did not expect to be slighted as they were, but moreover looked to you as one from whom they might receive what they considered a more becoming treatment.
Mr. John Bestard lost a fine colt a few fine specimen for a yearling.
