The volcanoes Umnak, Bogosloff, Programnia, Akutan, Shishaldin, and Pavloff, all located in the Aleutian Islands, 1,300 miles from Sitka, are probably the most interesting mountains in the world. All six volcanoes are in active operation, and are located within a radius of 100 miles of Oonalaska. From the Pacific Ocean all the mountains, with the exception of Pavloff, which is hidden from view behind another mount, can be seen at once, with the smoke and More is not told the world of these splendid Tourists do not go within 1,300 miles of them, for there is no regularly established line of steamers running further north than should prove the life study of a geological whaler or a revenue cutter.

The Lieutenant found Bogosloff an especially fascinating study. One hundred years ago Bogosloff did not exist. The is and on which the volcano is situated lay at the bottom of the sea. Just about 100 years ago there were continuous jarrings in the Aleutian group, and the several volcanoes smoked and belched forth lava, showing that an internal war was in progress in the a heavy disturbance, the natives of Oonalaska saw an immense object rise up out of the sea, about sixty miles to the northward. Great volumes of smoke and showers of a hes and running lava came out of the object. After many days the disturbance subsided, and the natives could see that a new island had come to join the group and they called the new arrival Bogosloff. The island was about half a mile long, and was 350 feet high. The island in reality was nothing but the volcano, for from the water line it towered from all sides up to the summit. A peculiar feature of the mount was that it had no well-defined crater. From many fissures which cut across the sides of the mountain and around the top huge volumes of smoke came, but at the top there was no hole. Still notwithstanding this deformity, Bogosloff was very lively, and made more fuss than all the rest of the larger vol-

So much smoke came out of the fissures that it was simply impossible to go close to them much less look down into them. There was no crater or fisures directly at the summit, as was found by examination. Again, last summer, the Lieutenant went to Alaska, this time in the revenue cutter Rush.

When the cuttermade landing at Oonalaska the natives told the officers of the steamer that a few months before there were eruptions among the volcanoes and that Bogosloff was especialy angry; that the island gave outgreat showers of hot ashes and steam and black smoke. The Rush made the run of sixty miles to the island, and long before she hove to those on board could see that the whole top of the volcano had fallen in, forming an immense crater, from out of which the smoke not only rolled, but puffed
