Hit Her With his Wooden Leg

The Imatics with wooden legs are not always so harmless as they appear, as a lady residing in the Impasse Delanuy, Paris, France, has learned to her cost. Her son-in-law, who rejoices in the inappropriate name of Beaumale and is the possessor of a wooden leg, returned recently to the domestic hearth on his release from a private asylum at Ville Evrard, to all appearance in a completely satisfactory mental state. His mother-in-law got up a violent quarrel with the cripple, and thinking that she could give him safely a piece of her mind, on account of his partial disablement proceeded to heap insults on his head. The excitement seems to have unstrung Beaumale once more, and suddenly wrenching off his wooden leg he dealt his mother-in-law a blow on the head which nearly killed her. The process of "nagging" had, indeed, driven the poor fellow completely mad again, and it took six men to conduct him to the police station whence he has been sent once more to the asylum.

THE STRANGE WOMAN.

A German Count Who Was Victimized to a Certain Extent.

HALIFAX, Sept. 10.—Mrs. John S. McLean and her daughters, of this city, now on a visit to Germany, recently wrote to friends saying that Count Howitz, of Puckan, would soon visit Halifax. He came a few days ago, accompanied by a lady, and registered at a semi-private hotel under a fictitious name. Yesterday he told the following story to the chief of police: He says he is Count Howitz, of Puckan, Germany, on a pleasure tour around the world. At Philadelphia he became acquainted with a woman who agreed to accompany him on his trip for a time. They came this way, their stay before coming to Halifax being at Charlotte-town, P. E. I. A few days ago the woman made a demand on him for a large sum of money. She frightened him by alleging she would have him arrested on the charge of abducting her, which was punishable by imprisonment for a long term in the penitentiary. The count evidently believed the woman, for he gave her $500 and was to have paid her $1,000 to-day. To a gentleman with whom he became acquainted in Halifax he told his story of woe. The Halifax man informed him that the woman was playing a game of blackmail, and the count became convinced that the case was about as stated by the Halifax gentleman. To a detective the woman admitted that she was a "sporting" girl, and was "playing" the count for all she was worth. She in turn became frightened and handed back the money she had received from the count, and promised to get out of town at once. The young German is no bogus count. He has letters of introduction to leading society people in Halifax.

Serious Reports from India.

Reports from British India give a gloomy picture of affairs there. Disaffection is general and the respect for British authority, which has since the great mutiny been sufficient to preserve peace, is said to have disappeared. A slight cause might precipitate a general revolt, the consequences of which the officials do not like to contemplate. It is significant that the government of India has been seriously considering the advisability of prosecuting for sedition a number of native papers and has abandoned the purpose solely through fear of inability to secure conviction and dread of the disastrous results of such a failure. The unfriendly attitude of the native press has long been recognized by those familiar with it as a source of danger to British ascendancy, but until lately the British authorities appear to have ignored the danger, possibly because unacquainted with the extent of the seditious spirit. The papers printed in English, or in the language best known to the English officials, are careful to keep within the line of discretion, but the small native papers, printed in unknown dialects and whose existence is hardly recognized by the English authorities, have been outspoken in their hatred of the foreign masters of India. Several years ago a selection of the utterances of these papers, published in different parts of the empire, was translated by a student of the Indian dialects and the attention of the home government called to its alarming nature. The tone of them all was that of bitter hatred to the British rulers and the object in constant view was an uprising against foreign domination. It was pointed out by the native editors that these "insolent dogs" of Englishmen were but a handful against the millions of natives kept in subjection by them, and that by a concerted effort they could be exterminated and the freedom of India achieved. No attention was paid to the warning of this "alarmist" and matters were allowed to run on as before. Emboldened by this indifference the native press has become more truculent and defiant until the government finds itself compelled to face the question of crushing out sedition or allowing it unchecked progress because unable to effectively interfere. The latter course seems to have been adopted of necessity.

A Proud Day for Canada.

September 1st was a proud day for Canada and our great transcontinental railway. Some months ago, when the mails and passengers of the Empress of India were run across the continent from Vancouver to Montreal in about 88 hours, the whole world wondered at this great feat of railroading, and almost everyone thought President Van Horne a little too enthusiastic when he said that even this magnificent record would be broken in the near future. Mr. Van Horne's words were prophetic, and a brand new feather is sticking out prominently from the new Dominion's cap. The Canadian Pacific's fast mail train, which left Vancouver at 1 p.m. last Saturday, on the arrival of the company's steamship Empress of Japan with the China and Japanese mails, reached Brockville, Ont., at 9.30 on Tuesday evening, having made the run in 76 hours, allowing for three hours lost by changes in time. The run from Port Arthur to Brockville, a distance of 900 miles, was made in 22 hours and a quarter, being by all odds the finest run ever made by a Canadian railway train. The mails were sent across from Brockville to Morrisstown by steamer, and at 9.45, a special was flying along the New York Central, and if all went well this train was expected to reach New York at 4.30 on Wednesday morning. If the mails caught the Inman S.S. City of New York, which sailed at 5 a.m., they should be landed in London on Wednesday, September 9, making the time from Yokohama to the heart of the empire by way of the Canadian Pacific railway and New York Central in 21 days, or four days less than the best time ever made. The Canadian Pacific's special was delayed about three hours by hot boxes, otherwise connection with the City of New York would have been made and time to spare.

When we Plant the Tree.

What do we plant when we plant the tree? We plant the ship which will cross the sea; We plant the mast to carry the sails; We plant the planks to withstand the gales— The keel, the keelson and beam and knee; We plant the ship when we plant the tree. What do we plant when we plant the tree? We plant the houses for you and me; We plant the rafters, the shingles, the floors; We plant the studding, the lath, the doors, The beams, the siding all parts that be; We plant the house when we plant the tree? What do we plant when we plant the tree? A thousand things that we daily see; We plant the things that outgrow the crag; We plant the staff for our country's flag; We plant the shade from the hot sun free; We plant all these when we plant the tree. —HENRY ABBEY.

A VERY QUEER STORY.

Man Eloping With His Wife.

Here's a very queer story (says a correspondent) about a man who undertook to carry off his wife after she had married another. The body of James Lennon, according to the belief of his friends, was picked out of a bog-ditch in Ireland near his home some weeks ago. He was decently washed and buried, as they say, and a tombstone in the village churchyard speaks of his virtues, which were extolled at length by the parish priest in his panegyric, while the church records show that his wife, through of circumstances, was forced to change the name he gave her for that of another. The man who was found dead was one John Leonard, whose absence, as it was thought, had been extensively advertised, for his body wore the clothing of Lennon, and partly decomposed as it was, was accepted as Lennon's. It was identified as such by William Rodgers, a foreman in Lennon's employ, a man who thinks that he is the husband of Lennon's wife and the master of Lennon's mill. And all this confusion, this mixture of romance and tragedy and mystery, was brought about through the operation of the Coercion Act in Ireland. But now for the incidents of what may be termed the plot of the story. James Lennon had suffered imprisonment under the Coercion Act. His release was celebrated in a public demonstration. Fired anew with the spirit of patriotism, he used seditious language. At the fair of Rathpreland, a place two miles distant from his home, he learned that a warrant had been issued for his arrest, and that the police awaited his return home. His health made him

FEARFUL OF THE RESULT of a second imprisonment. His friend and neighbor, John Leonard, offered to exchange clothes and throw the police off the track until Lennon had time to seek a hiding-place some miles away. "Tell my wife," said Lennon to Leonard, "that I will take a month's rest or so to recover, and that I will not write to her meanwhile, because the post-mark would betray me. Tell her not to worry, and if the police arrest you I will have a good march on them before they find it out." The message was never delivered. Leonard fell into or was shoved into, the ditch on his way home, and the body, partly decomposed, as already stated, was found four days later by William Rodgers, Lennon's foreman. It was buried, and Leonard was classed among the missing, and considered to know something of Lennon's supposed death. But here Lennon turns up all right, and this new feature also hinges on the Coercion Act, for Lennon would not have

from Cumberland, where he had been sojourning, had not the proclamation gone forth some days ago from Dublin Castle that all prosecutions under the Crimes Act would be dropped by the authorities. Then did James Lennon decide to return home, still unaware of the changes that were to greet him. James Lennon arrived home early on a Sunday morning. William Rodgers, his foreman, and Mrs. Lennon were going down the road to church. He followed them leisurely. The priest's residence is between the little church and Lennon's home, and as James arrived opposite the priest's house Father Doherty came out on his way to celebrate mass. He saw Lennon, whose funeral ceremony he had conducted and whose panegyric he had preached. Naturally he was startled, and exclaimed, "My God! James Lennon are you dead or alive?" "Alive and well, Father Doherty," was the answer. "Then, James, something more terrible than death has happened." "Why, what's the matter, Father?" "Come inside, James, and I'll tell you." The two entered the priest's house. Lennon related the circumstances of his departure, and the priest realized how the blunders arose. Then he startled Lennon by relating that William Rodgers, the foreman, had determined to resign unless a share in the mill and the hand, if not the heart, of Mrs. Lennon be bestowed upon him. His resignation under circumstances then existing meant ruin for Mrs. Lennon, beggary for herself and children; but as even the priest could not change Rodgers' mind, she reluctantly consented, and Rodgers took Lennon's place in the management of the mill and home, and became the head of the family. James Lennon sat dazed. Begging the priest not to mention his existence, he started for the New World, where he thought he could forget his sorrow, and if his wife and children were happy all would be well. On leaving Castle Garden he proceeded up Broadway with no definite purpose. When opposite the Astor House he was accidentally met by John Hughes, a New York box manufacturer, who visits Ireland every other summer, and who has spent many pleasant days with Mr. and Mrs. Lennon, in the County Down. To Mr. Hughes Lennon told his pitiful story. Mr. Hughes brought him to his home and coaxed him to return to Ireland, sell his property, and take his family to America and start anew. Lennon took his advice.

Turning the Tables on the Church.

One of the earlier yeomen of Bridgton was a pump maker, a good citizen, but with "no religious preferences." One day he was waited upon by one of the church assessors, who handed him a bill for the support of preaching. "I haven't heard no preaching," said the old man, somewhat surprised. "Well, brother, it's your own fault, then," replied the churchman. "It's been accessible to all, every Sabbath for a year." The old gentleman acknowledged the corn and paid. Not long after this the parish received from him a bill for a pump. "We have bought no pump of you," was the answer. "Well, then," replied the old gentleman, with a twinkle in his eye, "it's your own fault, for I have been making them for years."

He Sympathized With Adam.

If misery loves company it may be comforting to know that the average "heated term" at Aden, on the Red Sea, is 130 degrees. This recalls the remark of the Irish soldier, who was one of a newly-arrived British garrison there. "Well, Pat," said his Captain, "how do you like the climate of Aden?" "Sure, sor," said Pat, mopping his brow, "I should think Adam was glad to be driven out av it."

ARE YOU BALD?

A Boston Doctor Tells an English Newspaper How to Raise Hair

Henry Williams, M. D., of Boston, Eng., writes to the London Telegraph:

A far more common cause of the "plentiful lack" of hair now so prevalent is truss and nervous disorders. Dyspepsia and weak and falling hair go hand in hand; and who will say that we are not a dyspeptic nation? Now, dyspepsia is due to our modern mode of living; ergo, one of the great proximate causes of premature baldness is civilization. Indeed, we can have no doubt on this point when we remember that civilization has also introduced the "chimney-pot," probably to aid and abet.

Very many of the "bleak and barren brows" we see around us are also due to dyspepsia. The moral, therefore, is, look after your general health. At the same time, loss of hair is not always caused by loss of health. It frequently proceeds from purely local causes, and, as these causes can be guarded against, perhaps you will allow me to tell what to do and what not to do in order, under ordinary circumstances, to "keep their hair on."

1. Avoid tight-fitting hats and collars also close-fitting caps unless these be of some porous material. The two former prevent a due supply of blood to the parts, hence the hair papillae are put, as it were, on short commons all the time the hats and collars are worn. The caps engender caloric, which sets up irritation and ultimately that most stubborn form of dandruff—namely; pityriasis (i. e., a branny powder). Note that all headgear which is not porous should be ventilated at top and sides to allow a free current of air.

2. Never sit or stand with the top of the head near the gaslight or lamp. The heat thrown out is apt to paralyze the scalp tissues and dries up the hair itself.

3. Don't wash the head oftener than once a fortnight, when first rub in the yolk of an egg, and thoroughly rinse out with warm water, into which has been thrown a pinch of borax. Dry carefully and apply a little pure olive oil.

4. Beware of that common practice dipping the comb in water when arranging the hair. It promotes decomposition and rancidity of the natural oil, and so leads to "rotting."

5. If the hair be naturally dry, apply a little olive oil occasionally. If naturally oily, occasionally wash away the excess of sebaceous secretion by means of a lather of tepid water and soap bark (Quitlaya saponaria).

6. Salt water is most injurious to the hair, for which reason when sea bathing wear an oil cap.

7. Always treat the scalp as if you loved it. Take to heart Dr. Godfrey's dictum that "Every touch affecting so delicate a texture as the scalp should be soft and soothing; every application bland and mild." Don't use stiff bristles or wire brushes, and in all cases brush gently. Also always brush out the hair before attempting to comb it, and use the comb as little as possible.

8. Have the ends of the hair clipped once a month, if only to prevent them from splitting. But don't close crop.

I am sure, sir, that thousands of your readers would be benefited by following the above instructions; and, in conclusion, allow me to correct a slight error in your very excellent leader. You say that "in all countries and in all ages the loss of hair has exposed the loser to public derision." This is not quite correct. Lucian, for example, tells us that among the Selenites a bald pate was considered a mark of beauty.

Longest Telegraph Lines in the World.

The longest telegraph line in the world extends from 18 Old Broad-street, London, to 29 Cable-street, Calcutta, a distance of over 7,000 miles. A gentleman went into the London Office a short time ago, and was shown the Morse printer in connection with the main line from London to Teheran. Whilst he was there the instrument was switched on to Calcutta without a break. The signals were excellent, and the speed not less than fourteen words per minute. The wire runs through Emden, Warsaw, Odessa, Kertch, Tiflis, Teheran, Bishire, Jack, and Kurrachee, to Calcutta. Another long line of telegraph is that over which a cablegram can be sent between British Columbia and New Zealand. The wire crosses North America, Newfoundland, the Atlantic, England, Germany, both the Russias, in Europe and Asia, China, Japan, Java and Australia, making nearly a circuit of the globe. The overland telegraph which was completed in 1872, stretches from Port Darwin to the south of the Australian continent, a distance of 2,000 miles. Almost the whole of this distance was through a desolate country. The wooden poles were prepared at the nearest available places, some having to be conveyed a distance of 350 miles, while the iron poles were taken and average distance of 400 miles by land. Over 2,000 tons of material (being about one ton to the mile) had to be conveyed into the interior, and the total cost was £370,000.

AN AWFUL DEATH.

Martin Carey, a Cattle Drover Run Over and Mangled Beyond Recognition.

A despatch from Toronto says:—Martin Carey, a cattle drover, living with his father at 6 Wellington lane, was run over and killed by a train on night. The body was found on the track at 9.10 p. m. by John Morris, of 1 Defoe street, and Joseph Spence, of 106 Wellington avenue. So horribly was it mangled that the finders were at first uncertain whether the remains were those of a man or a sheep. Both legs were torn off, the entrails were hanging out and the head was twisted round behind the left shoulder. How the accident occurred is not very certain. Deceased was seen walking on the track some little time before his body was found. What train killed him is unknown, but the C.P.R. passenger train was the last to pass before he was picked up. The affair took place nearly opposite C. J. Smith's yard. The dead man was 27 years of age and unmarried. He has only been home from the old country a few days, and intended leaving for England again last night. Coroner Johnston was notified, but could not find anything to justify him in holding an inquest.
