A Toronto Man Falls Heir to $25,000-While Roughing it.

The steamer "Topeka," which arrived from Alask on Wednesday, brought down the story or a strange romance of the Her Life Was Despaired Of-Subject to Yukon, says the Vancouver World. Thomas Brown, more familiarly known as Shoemaker Brown, is one of the many fortune hunters who went into the wilds of Alaska some years ago in search of the precious gold. He drifted about the many mining hamlets along the Yukon, and finally got into Forty-mile. He had many times told | that of Miss Lizzie Duncan, a young woman | his companions that he had Cherokee blood in his veins, and they always attribute his quickness to resent an affront or use his gun, as due to his Indian mixture. Accord- have been known to a number of people. ing to the Alaskan News which publishes the romance, William Ogilvie, in charge of the Canadian boundary survey, now under headway, first met Shoemaker Brown on the Yukon river in 1888, little knowing at that time he would become an important factor in sending him back to his home and a joyful family. Mr. Ogilvie camped near Brown's solitary hut for several weeks, and each time they met Brown would enquire cautiously about Canadian affairs. Mr. Ogilvie noticed Brown's preoccupied behavior, and so invited him to come to his camp and spend an evening. Upon Brown finding that his companion had lately been | weak as water. One Sunday morning she to Toronto, he became less reserved, and seemed debating with himself about making a confession. Prior to that Ogilvie had asked him if it was true that he was part doctor who said she had heart disease. Cherokee Indian, as the fairness of his com. When he saw her again she had grown plexion would not warrant such a relationship. But Brown said it was true, and that he had been born on the Cherokee strip, his father being a white man, and his mother a squaw. Finally one evening Brown came to Ogilvie's tent, and said he wanted to Lizzie may stand the winter, but if she have a talk with him alone. Brown slyly stated that he had purposely

He hunted for Thomas Brown, his triend's father, far and near, for the shoe store on Sally street, but he could find no evidences of the place. There was no Sally street, and the alley of that name had numbers only to 18. He finally gave up the search. One day he was talking with the proprietor of a jewellery store, when an old man walked in and greeted them. He was one of the earliest pioneers of Toronto, and was so introduced to Ogilvie. Thinking he might get some information from the pioneer, he made known his search for the store at 8284 Sally street. The old man replied that the store was at the old location, but Sally street had been changed to Chestnut, in compliance with he wishes of the wealthy residents. Sure enough Mr. Ogilive found the shoe store at 8284 Chestnut street, with the signboard on the door bearing "Thoman Brown." He walked in a. He finally asked if she knew that Thomas Brown, who had left so many years ago was alive. The girl became all raptures. "Are you Uncle Thomas ?" she exclaimed, rushing forward to meet Ogilvie. But when told he was not, but only brought word of him, she still persisted in calling him uncle. "Come, let us go to mamma," she insisted, as he was led away. He sat down in the parlor while the girl ran back to the kitchen and told her mother that

Brown had left home because his young wife would make visits to her parents in Michigan, and would compel him to go after her. She also had difficulty with her husband's relatives over trival matters. The abandoned wife had been supported by the old man, and the two children had been given a good schooling. The father and sister made Ogilvie promise to send a letter to the lost Brown, praying him to return home, as there was $25,000 still intact, his portion of the estate. Ogilvie sent the letter in '90 in care of one Mc-McQuestin in '91, but Brown had left the horns, head and back of animals. Yukon river for Juneau. The letter followed him out, and in 1892, J. T. Fainting Spells and Heart Trouble-Doctors Said Recovery Was Impossible -A Wonderful Story.

From the Glasgow Echo. The case of "Little Nell," whose miraculous cure was reported in the newspapers, with a subsequent letter from the Rev. Samuel Harding, is but one in a series of similar cases in Glasgow. The latest is who has been snatched back to life. She Buffalo, N.Y. was in what is termed a "decline"-wasting away by inches before the eyes of her parents, and her sad condition seems to Consequently when she was found to have escaped the threatened death, and, to be, apparently, as well as anyone in Glasgow, a tremendous impetus was given to the prevalent talk, and an Echo reporter was directed to make a searching investigation, with the result that this strange story was entirely confirmed.

Arriving at 208 Stirling Road, the reporter was conducted into the presence of Mrs. Duncan by a rosy-cheeked young woman, who proved to be Miss Duncan, who looked in no way like an invalid.

"Heaven knows that a miracle has been wrought upon her. Eighteen months ago Lizzie began to pine away. The color left her entirely, and she appeared to be as said, 'Oh, mother, I canna rise to-day,' and before she had got out the words her whiteness became like that of a corpse, and she fell away into a faint. I sent for the worse and the doctor said, 'The poor lassie is very tar through.' We expected that poor Lizzie would not live long. There was no color in her face. She was wasting away, her cheek bones sticking through as if they would break the skin. Her arms and legs were just bones. The doctor said, does, that will be all.' One day, however, I chanced to read of several cases in which dying persons had been restored to life by a new scientific method-some pills, not like other medicine, but altogether of extraordinary virtue, called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I said to my husband, 'In the name of God let's try Dr. requested Mr. Ogilvie to call upon his father Williams' Pink Pills.' Well, before the first box was empty there was a marked was. "I am stronger than ever I was in my life," added the daughter, "yet I can hardly describe how ill I was. I was certainly dying. I could neither go up nor down stairs; I was afraid to walk on account of the fluttering sensation at my heart. Miss Wood the lady who drew the reporter's attention to the case said that the parents had their daughter's photograph taken for they thought that she would soon be sleeping in her grave. Lizzie once visited her, and was so weak that she had to carry her back to her house. "The change," said Miss Wood in conclusion, "has been wonderful. She is now a sonsie lass, and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been an instrument in God's own hands."
