GOVERNMENT BY PARTY. There were many, not long ago, who began seriously to question whether government by party, in Canada, would ever revert from the downward tendency toward Americanism, and approach idealization as grandly exemplified in Great Britain; and multitudes viewed with alarm, if not despair, the repeated success of the gi gantic bribery organization which then stified the free will of the people and debauched the electorate with open practices. Each succeeding election campaign increased the hold of this bribery pact upon the country, and caused it to flourish and grow stronger with continued triumphs. To-day men breathe easier, and the load of doubt and misgivings as to the efficacy of our political institutions and the cherished traditions of government by party have been removed from our minds by the knowledge that those principles will be acted upon and lived up to by the present dominant party. "Party," once wrote a celebrated British statesman, "is a body of men united for promoting, by their joint endeavors, the national interest upon some particular principle, upon which they are all agreed. The great principle upon which the Liberal party is founded, and in which all Liberals agree, is the principle so often enunciated-government of the people, by the people and for the people. Party, as applied to Toryism in Canada during the past twenty years, and as it is to-day, is a misnomer-a fine name for faction, of which the bonds that unite it are selfishness and corruption, and which worked to the country's degradation and ended in disaster. We see this faction in the throes of an internecine struggle, yet all the while presenting a front against the people's party, united still by the same bonds, to conserve its narrow aims. The Tory principle of government by party, to judge from the motives which seemed to have actuated that party, during the long rule of the late regime, was, and still is, government of the party, by the ring, and for pelf. As contradistinguished from the other, how marked in democratic nobility and unselfish patriotism is the Liberal guiding principle. The Tory faction, as its past history clearly demonstrates, is solely knit together by the common desire of political power and pelf; beyond this its cohesion is but a mockery and a sham. While Sir John Macdonald lived and ruled, there was a certain amount of unison among his party because he was shrewd enough to choose a class of men which usually embraced all the elements for this fy the least friendly of critics. binding together. To him is attributed the saying that the best cabinet would be one consisting of twelve mediocrities, each of whom you could, if you would, put in the penitentiary. Look then on the picture of such a midistry as thus painted and for its original let your thoughts go back a few years and let your thoughts go back a few years and rest upon that dark page in Canada's political history,

An opposition that would challenge the confidence of the country is always desirable if not indispensable to the successful working of our parliamentary institutions. Can such a qualification be found in the present opposition in the House; and, if so, upon what grounds is the affirmative to be based? But when all its statesmanship is simmered down to merely a perpetual exhibition of inconsistencies, fault-findings and impotent ill-humors, expending all its energies in Fosterian diatribe and Davinesque wind on the floors of parliament, it ceases to be of public utility and fails to command either public support or respect. The Liberal Government have been in power but little over one short year, yet have during that short space of time, with singular energy and courage, accomplished much to command the admiration of Great Britain and the respect of the nations, and enough that should satis-
