HAMMOND HANGED AT BRACE-BRIDGE ON THURSDAY.

He Makes a Confession-Only Those Legally Entitled to be Present Witnessed His

Last Moments. A despatch from Bracebridge, Ont., Corn-Quiet and easy; No. 2 yellow, 34c; says:-Willie Hammond, the murdered at three minutes past eight on Thursday morning, and remained suspended for 18 minutes. At eight o'clock the officers of the law entered the gaol and repaired at once to the corner of the yard where the scaffold had been erected. Radcliffe the hangman, had gone in a few minutes previous, carrying a valise, and smoking a cigar with easy nonchalance. The hangman went at once to Hammond's cell, where the doomed man was talking to Rev. Mr. Leith. No words passed between the two, and the prisoner's arms were quickly pinioned.

VERY FEW WITNESSES.

The story of the execution which follows has been gathered by interviewing those who were presnet, as Sheriff Bettes adhered to his intention of not admitting the press. So strict were the officer's views in the matter that he refused to make public the most commonplace facts connected with the affair; going so far indeed as to decline to tell the hour of execution or the name of the condemned man's spiritual attendant.

PROCESSION TO THE SCAFFOLD.

Hammond walked between County Constables Armstrong and McFayden, and though pale as a ghost, mounted the scaffold with a firm step. At the first glimpse of the instrument of the law he faltered, and his nerve forsook him for a brief instant. His self-possession returned to his aid in a moment, and he died bravely. Rev. M. J. Leith, the Presbyterian minister, followed the doomed man, and Sheriff Bettes, Dr. Steele, the gaol physician, Dr. Bridgeland, M. P. P., and Magistrates Sword, of Beatrice, and Boyer, of Bracebridge, were the only other witnesses of the horrible spectacle.

A PARTIAL CONFESSION.

The minister read the service for the occasion as he walked with bowed head, and Hammond appeared to listen to his words. The young murderer, in response to the usual question, said in Hops-New stocks coming in, but Trieste. He said he had other irons a clear voice, "I am guilty in one sense but innocent in another." The signal was then given to the hangman, and the bolt was drawn. Hammond shot down and out of sight, and only the twitching rope spoke of the tragedy which was being enacted. Dr. Steele drew his watch, and for eighteen minutes stood beside the dangling heap of clothes. He then pronounced life to the casket containing the remains of be extinct, and the body was cut down.

OUTSIDE THE GAOL.

The sound of the trap-door falling was distinctly heard outside the gaol premises, where a motley group of men, women and children were gathered. sent by the children and grandchildren As soon as the bolt had been sprung a of the deceased, while many other black flag was run up in front of the floral offerings were upon the walls of court-house, where it remained for an the chapel. The Ontario Government will allow Mr. Hammond, senior, to bury his dead, and the interment will probably take place at Gravenhurst. Coroner Campbell empanelled a jury immediately after the execution, but it was not until an hour and a half later that this learned body found out, and made the announcement, that the cause of death was a broken neck.

Hammond poisoned his wife with prussic acid at Gravenhurst, with the object of securing $5,000 insurance which he had placed on her life.
