RICHMOND HILL, March 8, 1900

NEWSPAPER EXPERIMENT.

Next Tuesday, March 13, the Rev. C. M. Sheldon proposes to commence conducting a daily newspaper, The Topeka, Kansas, Capital, as an experiment on strictly Christian lines. We presume that these lines will be in accordance with the author's views as exemplified in his popular volume, "In His Steps." In his new venture the author has the advantage of his ideal proprietor of "The News." He has a world-wide prestige, and the result will be a world-wide patronage. The very statement of a proposal to run a daily newspaper, taking as the motto, "What would Jesus Do?" has created a universal curiosity so that subscriptions are already flowing in with every mail and from every continent. The rush is expected to be so great that the postal authorities have to increase their facilities so as to be able to forward the orders and supply the demands. Should the publication of the paper be continued for any length of time, and when the novelty has somewhat subsided, and curiosity gratified, there might be required a Virginia Page or some other millionaire to subsidize the enterprise.

The invasion of private property by students of McGill University, Montreal, carrying before them the national colors, is greatly to be deplored. Such lamentable demonstrations are always in bad taste, and endanger the friendship which should exist among the various races in the Dominion. Some of the French journalists in Quebec, the same as some of the rabid partizan journalists of this province, may be in a manner responsible for much of the bad feeling caused by inflammatory editorials, but students of such a noted university as McGill is, should be slow to give offense. The French, after the relief of Ladysmith, may not have been as demonstrative as some would like, but it is folly to ask men to shout if it does not proceed from the heart. It is important in the present crisis that the British, who are standing for the cause of justice and liberty, should be victorious over their brave but misguided opponents, but it is also important that the different races in Canada should live together in peace and good-will.

An all assuming anxiety to win a little cheap applause is leading Oppositionists to do curious things these days, and sometimes their action is to put it mildly, not in the best possible taste. Conservative Whip Taylor, for example, inquired on Thursday whether the Government intended to take any steps to erect a monument at the Capital in memory of the Canadians who had fallen in South Africa. The Premier's dignified reply conveyed a well-deserved snub to the fussy little gentleman from South Leeds. He said "The Government believes that so long as the war lasts all our efforts should be devoted to fighting the battles of the empire, and when the war is over the Government will be eager to remember not only the dead but the living as well."

Nothing of vital importance has transpired from the war centre since the relief of Ladysmith by Lord Dundonald. The relief to the beleaguered town came not a day too soon as starvation was already staring the inhabitants in the face, and many were being carried off by sickness. Lord

Roberts and his army of some 30,000 men are pushing forward and although the Boers are strongly entrenched in different places the British forces hope to drive them from their positions and capture the retreating enemy. Late dispatches go to show that the Boers refuse to stand their ground. Lord Roberts telegraphed yesterday that the enemy were in full retreat, followed by the British troops.

It is to be hoped the concert to be held in the Masonic Hall to-morrow evening in aid of the National Patriotic Fund will be well patronized, not only by the citizens of this village but by those in surrounding neighborhoods and villages. The object is a worthy one, and apart from this a glance at the programme which appears on another page will give assurance that the entertainment will be first-class. Let all who can, endeavor to assist by their presence, so that the committee will be enabled to forward a cheque which will do credit to this section of country.
