O'BRIEN PAYS PENALTY FOR HIS REVOLTING CRIME.

How Vigilance of the Police Discovered Crime and Tracked Criminal.

A despatch from Ottawa says .- The Government has been notified that partner of his crime. O'Brien, the murderer, was executed at Dawson City on August 23rd. The information came through the Mounted Police to Comptroller F White at Ottawa. O'Brien made no confession before he died.

On Christman morning, 1899, three men left a road-house on the Skagway trail, known as the Minto Roadhouse. The next road-house was at Hutchiku, and there they should have arrived that night, but they never turned up. Two of them, Clayson and Relfe, had come thus far, 200 miles from Dawson, intending to Steel Corporation Claim to Have spend the winter with their families in the States. The third, a man named Oleson, belonged to Hutchiku where he was employed in connection with the telegraph lines. He had been sent out to repair the line, and having done so, was returning to his at Hutchiku, for which Corporal sheep and lambs, 50 calves and a Ryan of the Mounted Police, had provided a rare treat in the Yukon, namely, a turkey. No one was about it, but it looked as if the owner might be back any moment. It had evidently been occupied by two persons, for there was a double bunk and a duplicate supply of table utensils of the Yukon traveler. The constable waited over night, in the hope that the owners would turn up, but soon concluded that the place had been abandoned. He reported to his comrades, and Constable Pennycuick and Detective Maguire, also of the Mounted Police, were detailed to look into the matter. The manner in which these men wrung her secret from the bosom of the desert forms a really marvellous chapter in the records of crime. They spent weeks in the neighborhood of the tent, and along the private trail which had served as a key to the whole black mystery. They literally sifted the snow inch by inch, and from many mute things they read the story. blood where the victims had given up their lives, not without a struggle on the part of Oleson at least. After that date he was in possession of a roll of bills and a pouch of nuggets, one of them being so remarkable as to be well known in Dawson, and also known to have been in possession of Clayson. Graves, the other man, seems to have utterly vanished, but it is suspected that O' Brien subsequently murdered the Seldom have the tirelessness and resourcefulness of British justice been more remarkably displayed. One witness who had left the Yukon was taken back 5,000 miles, although the narration of his story occupied but five minutes. Another witness was detained a year and a half at the expense of the Crown in order to secure her evidence.

A despatch from Montreal says:-

The Grand Trunk's International

Limited Express, which left the Bonaventure station at 9 o'clock on Friday morning for Toronto, came into collision with a freight train between Pointe Claire and St. Anne's, with serious but fortunately no fatal results. The nerve of the engineer, James Murphy, and the strength of the cars alone saved many passengers' lives. It was a rear-end collision, otherwise even these circumstances would not have prevented more serious consequences. The "Limited" was going at about fifty miles an hour when the freight train was first seen ahead of it, but the driver determined to stick to his post and take the consequences, which looked like certain death. The lives of his human freight depended upon his courage and skill.
