ANENT NEWSPAPERS.

It is quite natural that a fire in a neighbors' house should interest us more than the burning of a whole village in some country of the geography and people of which we know little or nothing. That is why the local paper has such a firm hold on its subscribers. One must take it because one is so immediately interested in the news it gives.

But most people take several publications to meet the varied needs and tastes of an intelligent family. Probably along with their local paper one of the big metropolitan daily or weekly newspapers comes next in consideration. Large metropolitan papers such as the Montreal Witness, Daily edition at $3 and Weekly at $1, for example lay out to supply every interest of a family, the news and editorial being backed up by many interesting features such as stories, cookery, dress-making, fancy work, Boys, Children's, Home departments, agricultural, legal, medical, numismatic, chess and many other special departments.

There are wants however which even these big papers do not supply, as illustrated by the experience of the publishers of the "Witness." The Dougalls long ago realized the importance of a young people's paper, suitable for Sunday reading. The "Northern Messenger," at 30cts. per annum, like the "Witness," has been a household world all over Canada as long as anyone can remember. It seems to meet its own sort of need well, as it claims a standing circulation of over fifty thousand copies a week.

But what interested us of late is a new departure in journalism on the part of the same house. About a year ago they hit, as results have proved on another need in journalism. It was the need of a good eclectic which, for a dollar a year, and within the compass of the business man's time for reading, would supply the best articles that appear during a week in the great publications of the world in general. The newest publication is appropriately called "World Wide." It has surprised a great many people to find how much of the most interesting and informing current reading they can get in such small compass and for so small a price. There is probably no other eclectic published that would give the ordinary reader whose time for reading is limited the same satisfaction. We see it stated that ever since it was started it has grown at the astonishing rate of nearly a thousand new subscribers a month. The price is only seventy-five cents to January 1st, 1903, if paid before the end of January. It is sixteen pages and is issued every Friday.

Though of course, we do not agree with everything in them we take a certain pleasure in referring to the publications of the "Witness" Office as we cannot but acknowledge that they deserve the esteem in which they are held throughout the Dominion. The publishers have laid their ways and they have held to them through thick and thin. Their publications are perhaps as clean and dignified as is possible to make them.
