THE HERBAGEUM THEORY

Sometwenty years ago a certain man had a theory that the sweet, fragrant pastures of early summer could be so nearly reproduced by proper blending of pure spices of an aromatic nature as to assure to farm stock throughout the whole year that thorough assimilation of their foods which they enjoy while living on the buds, blossoms and tender grasses of a perfect June pasture. He knew that if his theory was a true theory, it meant freedom from disease, a rapid, healthy growth and great economy in the production of all animal products. He also knew that unless true economy could be assured to the feeder the venture could not possibly prove a permanent success financially.

The Herbageum proved to be a true theory, and the product was put on the market in such shape and at such a price as to give the feeder the best end of the profit. All this took place twenty years ago, and since that time there has been a steady increase in the demand for Herbageum. There have come numerous preparations of concentrated and so-called condimental stock foods, but Herbageum only has proven permanent. This is largely because in feeding Herbageum the feeder has the greatest margin of profit. For instance, 50 cents' worth of Herbageum will make one and one-quarter tons of skim milk, equal to new milk, for calves. Certainly there is substantial margin of profit there, and the fact has been proven beyond all doubt.

If fed regularly to young pigs from the first, they will be mature bacon hogs at five months instead of at seven months, and the Herbageum fed hogs always grades "firm."

It will keep milch cows right up to their highest standard of production, and at the same time keep them up in flesh, and with a coat like that which a June pasture gives. "The Herbageum Theory" excludes all injurious drugs and dopes that act directly on the system; the idea being simply to produce a substitute for those aromatic qualities that pass from the green food in the ripening and drying process.

Horses thrive when they have Herbageum added to their daily ration of dry winter feed, and there is no after ill effect from its use. The Herbageum theory is a true theory, and its truth is never questioned by those who have tested it in every-day practical feeding.
