Everything they had with them (even their clothing) was frozen hard as wood. The terrible strain of clinging on to the exposed slope had kept their bodies warm and saved them from being frozen to death in the glacial hurricane. When they arrived at Zermatt they could hardly walk or speak.

Mme. Williseck had been employed at the Brasserie Mollard as cashier, and Hubert, who was then a bottle-washer, ventured to make love to her, and was dismissed by the proprietor.

Hubert then entered on a series of practical jokes against M. Mollard, sending him coffins, cartloads of grease and vans of furniture, and telling undertakers, doctors and nurses to call on his victim.

M. Mollard at length induced the police to arrest Hubert, who was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, but was released under the First Offenders' Act.
