

A MOTHER'S TRIALS

Care of Home and Children Often Causes a Breakdown.

The woman at home, deep in household duties and the cares of motherhood, needs occasional help to keep her in good health. The demands upon a mother's health are many and severe. Her own health trials and her children's welfare exact heavy tolls, while hurried meals, broken rest and much indoor living tend to weaken her constitution. No wonder that the woman at home is often indisposed through weakness, headaches, backaches and nervousness. Too many women have grown to accept these visitations as a part of the lot of motherhood. But many and varied as her health troubles are, the cause is simple and the cure at hand. When well, it is the woman's good blood that keeps her well; when ill she must make her blood rich to renew her health. The nursing mother more than any other woman in the world needs rich blood and plenty of it. There is one always unfailing way to get this good blood so necessary to perfect health, and that is through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills make new blood abundantly, and through their use thousands of weak, ailing wives and mothers have been made bright, cheerful and strong. If you are ailing, easily tired, or depressed, it is a duty you owe yourself and your family to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial. What this medicine has done for others it will surely do for you.

Chinese Medicine.

Dried frogs and asbestos are common ingredients in the "order" which the Chinese doctor prescribes for his patient. For the sake of variety he may include in the prescription any of the following for which the patient perhaps may express a preference: Scorpions, rhinoceros skins, wood shavings, flies, crushed pebbles, moths, centipedes, toads, lizards, caterpillars, powdered snakes or wasps.

She'd Learned.

The puppy had been punished, and was sulking in a corner. To him came the small daughter of the house, to administer, not comfort, but advice. "You may just as well be good first as last, Spot," she admonished. "Everybody that belongs to mother has got to mind. I've been through it all—and I know."

TWO MARVELLOUS VOYAGES

The growing light of the autumn morning greying the eastern sky showed to scared watchers on the beach three strange ships that had, apparently, sprung from nowhere during the night. And the watchers on the beach were scared, too, for though this was the year 1492, not one of them had ever seen a ship before in his or her life.

Then stranger things commenced to happen. Something dropped from one of the ships—caravels, their crews called them—and into it stepped men. Then it commenced to row ashore. This the watchers understood, for they used small boats themselves. Slowly it made its way towards the tiny islet standing like an outpost of the New World, a tall, gaunt man, verging on middle age and dressed richly in scarlet, standing in its bow, with a gold-bedecked flag dropping from its staff in his hand.

The boat touched land, and the tall man, in an ecstasy of joy, with his great eyes glinting with pride, flung himself to the sand. Presently he kissed the dry ground; then, with tears of deep emotion rolling down his cheeks, drew his sword, raised his flag, and proclaimed that he annexed the land as part of the dominions of his Majesty Fernando, King of Spain.

After a Perilous Voyage.

He was Christopher Columbus, the doyen of all Transatlantic voyagers, a dour personage, who, during his forty-and-one years, had "undergone trials not a few."

Behind him lay a voyage of seventy days, wherein he had seen no land or anything made by men that floated on the sea. His high-bowed and high-sterned caravel, Sancta Maria, driven by snowy sails with a scarlet cross emblazoned on them, had carried him at a slow eight knots across the hitherto uncharted waters, the sport of the tides, dependent upon Nature's winds for her propulsion in the right direction.

Columbus' crews were unwilling explorers. It is on record that some were felons brought from prisons to make up the companies of the three ships. A few crude navigation instruments and the sun and stars were all his aids in the keeping of a due-west course, and the caravels had neither speech nor sight of their fellow-men until, seven months after they set out, they once again made Spain. Only then could those who granted Columbus permission to make the venture be told of its success or failure.

And the only authentic record of the trip is contained in a hand-printed book made at the dictation of Columbus months after he had recovered from the fatigue and exhaustion ensuing upon his truly epoch-making Transatlantic voyage.

The Pioneer of the Airway.

But to-day school children learn that Christopher Columbus discovered America on October 12th, 1492, and across the path blazoned by Sancta Maria and her two frail consorts countless ships come and go with the commerce and travellers of the Old and the New Worlds.

The grey light of a wind-driven sky almost hid the cigar-shaped hull of the great ship that had suddenly sailed into the purview of the thousands of eager eyes watching for her advent. Steam-whistles hooted and sirens yelled, while the waiting crowds sent up cheer after cheer to welcome this pioneer of aerial navigation.

Then the great ship of the air stopped, and hovered at a height of two hundred feet above the huge field which had been specially made ready for her reception. Suddenly a small speck detached itself from one of the microscopic carriages slung under her belly, and fell perhaps twenty feet like a stone.

Then it seemed to stop, and a parachute opened out, revealing to the astounded watchers a British officer descending to the ground to supervise the berthing of his Britannic Majesty's Airship R-34.

This pioneer from the clouds carried a flag, nor could he annex land in the name of the sovereign to whom he owed allegiance. He did not kiss the earth, though he was unfeignedly glad to feel it beneath his feet, nor did he cry with joy. Instead, he set about seeing that the specially-trained mooring parties of American aviation mechanics made R-34's anchors properly fast to her moorings.

Then the great airship commenced to sink lower and lower till her belly almost touched the ground, and from her gondolas there stepped less than a score of men.

With Every Scientific Aid.

Behind R-34 lay a voyage of 3,130 miles, performed in 108 hours and 12 minutes, or just over four and a half days. The great airship, 675 ft. long, had fought baffling gales and atmospheric storms, and nosed through fogs at an average speed of nearly thirty knots per hour, despite the fact that her petrol supplies were growing alarmingly short. Never had she been the sport of the winds, nor had she been compelled to grope her way, for skilled navigators, armed with ultra scientific instruments, had guided her on the shortest route across the trackless wastes of air.

Her crew were all volunteers—indeed, one of them was so eager to make the passage that he stowed himself away. Never was R-34 for a moment unable to establish communication with her starting point and destination, for at intervals her wireless told of her progress, and even summoned aid to stand by her when her fuel threatened to give out.

And in less than a minute after she had touched ground, wireless telegraphy told the whole world of her feat. And hundreds of cinema cameras filmed her as she hovered and landed, and thousands of people the same night witnessed in photographs the thrilling scene.

And in the days to come the school children will be taught that Airship R-34 made the first voyage from Great Britain to America, and reached New York on July 6th, 1919.

Sancta Maria, under Columbus' orders, opened up the ocean pathways to and from America; R-34, commanded by Major Scott, R.A.F., has opened up the aerial tracks, and surely it is not too much to prophesy that airships will, in the not-far-distant future, be as numerous in the air above as surface ships are on the broad bosom of the Atlantic.

Lost Arms Without Pain.

Our story of a man being blown away, unhurt, by the explosion of a bomb which he did not hear must seem incredible to many people. Here is something like an analogy.

King Edward once brought together at his dinner table Rustem Pasha, who had had half his right hand and part of his arm torn off by a bear, and Sir Edward Bradford, who had had his left arm up to the elbow mulched away by a tiger.

The two men compared notes. Neither had felt the least twinge of pain at the time. They imagined that their intense desire to save their lives dulled all other senses.

Weeping Potatoes.

Traveller (to Irishman): "Well, Pat, I see you have a small garden."

"Yes, sorr."

"What is it set with?"

"Nothing, sorr. I set it with potatoes last year, and not one of them came up."

"That's strange! How do you explain that?"

"Well, sorr, the man next door to me set his garden full of onions."

"Well, had that anything to do with your potatoes not growing?"

"Yes, sorr. Pedad, them onions was that strong that my potatoes couldn't see to grow because of their eyes watering."

He paused to see the effect of the words. Then one of his listeners asked:

It Works! Try It

Tells how to loosen a sore, tender corn so it lifts out without pain.

Good news spreads rapidly and druggists here are kept busy dispensing freezone, the ether discovery of a Cincinnati man, which is said to loosen any corn so it lifts out with the fingers.

Ask at any pharmacy for a quarter ounce of freezone, which will cost very little, but is said to be sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You apply just a few drops on the tender, aching corn and instantly the soreness is relieved, and soon the corn is so shriveled that it lifts out without pain. It is a sticky substance which dries when applied and never inflames or even irritates the adjoining tissue.

This discovery will prevent thousands of deaths annually from lockjaw and infection heretofore resulting from the suicidal habit of cutting corns.
