Others should not ignore their unsteady moods or the various troubles that tell of approaching womanhood. It should be constantly borne in mind that pale, bloodless girls need plenty of nourishment, plenty of sleep and regular open-air exercise. But a lack of appetite, and tired, aching limbs tend to hinder progress. To save the weak, bloodless sufferer she must have plenty of rich, red blood and nothing meets the case of this kind so well as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills not only enrich and increase the blood supply, they help the appetite and aid digestion, relieve the weary back and limbs, thus promptly restoring health and strength and transforming anaemic girls and women into cheerful, happy people. Among the thousands who have obtained new health and strength through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is Miss Violet Booth, Genarm, Ont., who says:—"For a long time I was in a badly run down condition. I was pale, breathless at the least exertion, and could hardly do my household work without stopping to rest. I often had severe headaches, and my appetite was poor and fickle, and I would get up in the morning without feeling the least bit rested. I had tried several medicines, but did not get benefit from anything until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. When I had taken two boxes I could see an improvement, and after taking six boxes I found my health fully restored. I feel altogether different since I used the pills that I strongly advise them for all weak, run down people."

If you are weak or ailing in any way, avail yourself at once of the splendid home treatment which Dr. Williams' Pink Pills so easily afford, and you will be among those who rejoice in regained health. These pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, or may be ordered by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville.

Why Did Warren Steal?

Warren was home from school. He had stolen some money that another pupil had left lying on his desk. The parents had been summoned; there had been a secret tribunal and Warren had been brought home until the mortified and astonished parents could decide what to do.

Warren's mother told me all about it. "What shall we do?" she finished tearfully. "He has disgraced himself for life and brought shame upon us. Can you imagine what would make my son steal?"

"If I had fully answered Ada's question, I should have said something like this:

"You did not know that you taught him to be dishonest!

"Your son has been surrounded by petty forms of dishonesty all his life.

"One day just before Warren went to school, you returned from a drive in the country with a number of fine peaches in the bottom of the car. Some one remarked that you must have a good friend in the country. 'Yes,' you said laughingly, 'only he doesn't know he is our friend.' Little Warren helped his father gather those peaches to which you had no right.

"In your bathroom to-day I saw a towel stamped with the name of a hotel you had visited.

"One day last summer I heard you tell of the clerk's making a mistake of a dollar in your change. 'In your favor?' your husband asked. 'Of course in my favor,' you answered. 'I would have told him if it had not been.' Your boy heard that. I suppose he often has heard similar things.

"Another time as you gathered up your groceries at the store you accidentally picked up from the counter a pound of butter for which you had not paid. You discovered it after you reached home but instead of returning it to the grocer you said, 'Oh, well, we're a pound of butter ahead! And at that it won't begin to pay back for the times he has sent the poor goods.'

"I have heard you tell how you escaped paying your fare to the city and how you used an old transfer on the street car.

"You glanced at a borrowed book one day and remarked that you might as well keep it now—you had had it so long that the lender had forgotten all about it.

"These are a few incidents of petty dishonesty that I have seen in my association with your family. I do not suppose they are the only ones. Now, frankly, what could you expect of a child brought up in your home?"

I did not put it so bluntly as that to Ada. I tried to make her see that Warren's notions of honor had been gained from his environment.

Ada and her husband think they are honest. They are in some things. You could place any sum of money in their hands without an accounting and years afterward receive it to the last penny. Anyone's property would be safe in their hands. They might control unlimited trust funds for helpless orphans and not a cent would be misused. Ada's husband might well have all the bank funds open to his hands and he would not think of appropriating any. If Ada's guests scattered jewels all over the house, Ada would feel no temptation. Yet side by side with this honesty they practice petty dishonesty, which for some unexplained reason, appears to have no disgrace attached to it.

Warren is yet too young to judge. He has as yet no feeling of loyalty to make him "square" with his school-mate, and he could not see that wavering line his parents draw between honesty in things great and small.

Children respond quickly to high ideals of honor in history or story. If their home influences do not draw the other way, they can be trained to a fine high sense of honor that we sadly call old-fashioned, but to which we all give ungrudging admiration when we meet it.

"But from his babyhood, we've told him never to touch anything belonging to another," says Warren's mother, weeping.

In many homes I have seen the tragedy of the child who has stolen something and has been detected. Most parents meet the situation with fierce, resentful shame; too few with understanding and a disposition to look for causes.

The Comfortable People.

In the ground and under green,
By the brooding tower or steeple,
They who happily have been
Are the comfortable people,
For they rest entirely there,
Void of toil, and free of care.

Darkness which is not a night
May enfold their endless dreaming,
But they do not need a light,
Having done with slight and seeming.

They are not like me and you,
For they know their state is true,
In the earth and under snow,
Or the dandelion's glow,
Near the quiet tower or steeple,
Ah, the comfortable people—
Those unharmed and gray,
Dreaming deeply out of day.

You Can Buy the Best Gray-Dort Ever Built

THE Gray-Dort which your dealer has to-day is the best Gray-Dort ever built.

More than that. It is the greatest Gray-Dort value.

For $1,465 you get a Gray-Dort with ten major improvements and a dozen refinements.

With a bigger gas tank, placed in the rear, with a new, extra-heavy, extra-safe steering gear. With the emergency brake on a lever—and with Thermoid brake linings.

A more convenient Gray-Dort, the side curtains opening with the doors, with very much more leg-room in the tonneau and with more in the driving compartment because of the shorter and smarter cowl.

A Gray-Dort which has the good-looks of a smarter top, hand-tailored in our own shops, a smarter hood, with many long, narrow louvres.

There are many more refinements which you will find when you drive the new Gray-Dort.

Here you have the same powerful, finely-built motor with its big bore and long stroke. The same heavy crankshaft, many pounds heavier than on other light cars.

A rear axle built specially for us right here in Chatham. Long springs, built here, too. Westinghouse starting and lighting. Improved Carter carburetor. Every unit of motor and chassis is bigger and stronger and higher quality than is usually considered for light cars.

Gray-Dort production has been doubled for this year. But our dealers tell us that this will not be sufficient to meet the demand. It would be wise to see the Gray-Dort dealer to-day.
