Surnames and Their Origin

CRANE
 Variation—Crain.
 Racial Origin—English.
 Source—A place, also a nickname.

The manner in which such a family name as Crane could have originated is likely to be puzzling to the casually curious, for certainly the crane was not a common enough bird in England of the middle ages to have occurred to a man's associates in that period when various descriptive phrases came into use to differentiate one individual from others bearing the same given name.

There might have been exceptional cases here and there of deers in rare animals who could have gotten the surname from the fact that they sold cranes. But that would not account for the very many families which today bear the name. It might also, and undoubtedly was, in some instances, conferred upon a man as a nickname, and from this develop into a family name.

But the explanation, in the vast majority of cases, lies in a custom quite widespread in the middle ages, and now all but forgotten, except where the owner of a little inn, restaurant or curio shop desires to lend an air of quaintness and antiquity to his business. The custom was that of placing outside his door a sign bearing the picture of some animal or article. Lettered signs were little used because the bulk of the population could not read. But the picture was a distinguishing mark to the uneducated as well as the educated eye. It was not uncommon, on busy streets, to see a veritable menagerie on the signs of the shops and inns of a single square. It was much easier to refer to a man simply as "Geoffrey Crane" than as "Geoffrey at the sign of the Crane." Hence the modern form of the name, though at one period it was preceded by "de la" (of the).

a host of cases. There are many Bryans who trace their names back to one of the Irish Bryans. Likewise there are Bryans whose names should logically be spelled Bryan or Bryant. For while Brian is Irish, and inevitably so when the prefix "O" is used, Bryan and Bryant are Norman-French and there are hundreds of families of this name in North America and England whose ancestors never saw Ireland.

Bryan was a Christian name among the Norman invaders of England, and it is from this source that the English Bryans and Bryants developed, as well as the modern Frenche Breon. It was originally, of course, "de Bryan" and "de Brian," being variously spelled.

As a Christian name, however, it was Celtic rather than Teutonic, though names of the latter classification predominated among the Normans. The Normans had picked it up in their previous occupation of Brittany early in the Christian era. The Bretons are Celtic, belonging to the Cymric branch of that race, together with the Welsh, as distinguished from the Irish and the Scots, who form the Gaelic branch. The meaning of the name was the same as that of the Irish Brian, however, being derived from the Celtic word for "strength."

HOW TO RELIEVE CHILDREN'S COLDS

Avoid Serious Results by Using Baby's Own Tablets.

When a child shows the first symptoms of a cold, such as sneezing, redness of the eyes, clogged or running nose, prompt measures for relief may avert serious results. Mothers should always have on hand some simple, safe and effective remedy for immediate use.

Baby's Own Tablets act quickly, contain no opiate or narcotics, are tasteless and harmless. Mrs. Joseph Cadieux, Holyoke, Mass., says:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my children and find them a very satisfactory medicine. When my little boy had a cold I gave him the Tablets at night and he was well next day. I give them to the children for constipation, and they always do good. I think Baby's Own Tablets are much easier to give a child than liquid medicine. I recommend the Tablets to all mothers who have small children and believe they should always be kept on hand."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Poem Worth Knowing.

"Phyllada Flouts Me."
 If one man could claim authorship of all the poems written by "Mr. Anonymous," he would be one of the greatest, as well as one of the most prolific, poets in the world. Few of the fine old ballads in English have an author's name attached to them; yet it seems strange that a charming poem like "Phyllada Flouts Me," of which we quote the first and last verses, should never have been owned.

O, what a plague is love!
 How shall I bear it?
 She will inconstant prove,
 I greatly fear it.
 She so torments my mind
 That my strength faileth,
 And wavers with the wind
 As the ship saileth.
 Please her the best I may,
 She loves the best to gaine say:
 Alack and well-a-day,
 Phyllada flouts me.

I cannot work or sleep
 At all in season;
 Love wounds my heart so deep
 Without all reason.
 I 'gin to pine away
 In my love's shadow,
 Like as a fat beast may,
 Penn'd in a meadow,
 I shall be dead, I fear,
 Within this thousand year;
 And all for that my dear
 Phyllada flouts me.

HEALTH BROKE DOWN

Could Not Get Sleep for Hours After Going to Bed.

"It is not natural for me to sit down and write a letter in praise of a proprietary medicine as I had always been skeptical as to their virtues." Thus writes Mr. Arthur Seguin, Storthoaks, Sask., who further says:—"But three years ago I opened a general store here in Storthoaks and placed on my shelves a few lines of the best known proprietary medicines. Among these, naturally, were Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. As there were three of my customers who were obtaining good results from taking the pills, and as I was in need of a medicine I decided to try them myself.

"I had been suffering from catarrh for years, and my inside work had completely broken down my health. I was coughing all day, suffered from indigestion, and could not sleep until three or four hours after retiring. I started the pills, not with any great confidence, but by the time I had finished the second box I marked much improvement. At the fourth box I felt quite recovered, but continued them for some further time. My cough has left me, the indigestion has disappeared and I now fall asleep almost as soon as I am in bed. In my store now I do not hesitate to recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to any who are feeling run-down or without energy, as I think they are a blessing to mankind."

If others who may feel skeptical will give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial they will be convinced as was Mr. Seguin. You can get the pills from your druggist, or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Indians.

The teacher was trying to demonstrate the truth that love and protective care is instinctive in all parents. The story of the baby Moses and the child Samuel had amply illustrated the point from the human side. "And now," she said mysteriously, "I'm thinking of mothers that don't look or dress as we do! They wear feathers."

Instantly came the answer from one bright little girl. "Indians," she said triumphantly.

In the same class the following definition of a frog was given: "He is that thing that when he sits down he jumps up, and when he jumps up he sits down."

In British Columbia there is an abundant supply of red cedar, sometimes called the giant cedar, as it frequently reaches 150 feet in height and 10 feet in diameter.

Diphtheria.

When Karsen and the good dog "Balto" carried antitoxin to the people of Nome last summer, they were applauded by the whole American Continent, not only for trudging through ice and snow on an errand of mercy, but because they arrived in time to save many lives. Even the smallest urchin standing in front of a bulletin board marking the stages of the race with death knew the point of the mad drive was that, to be of use and save the people from death, the antitoxin must be given early. Every man and woman, every mother and father in Canada and the United States was made aware that a case of diphtheria is certain to recover if antitoxin is given on the first day of the illness; that every day lost means so many chances less; that if delayed until the 6th to 8th day, antitoxin may be of little use. Time is the important factor. Early administration means cure; delayed administration may be too late and futile. The parent, the doctor and the medical officer of health share the responsibility for early administration.

It is good to save a child from death, but is it not better still to save a child from disease? During the year 1925 research workers in the health field have perfected "Toxoid," a sure preventive against diphtheria. It is safe and absolutely sure; further, it gives protection against diphtheria without any bad effects. Take your child while he is well to your physician for the "Toxoid" treatment; you will then enjoy an easy mind all through the winter because you know he will be protected against that dreadful foe of young children, diphtheria, and all the evils in its train, such as an impaired heart and general debility.

A Fire of the Imagination.

The day, which had begun as Indian summer, had changed rapidly through the afternoon until, at twilight, it became a raw, nipping habinger of coming winter. The proprietor of the village inn, with a lighted lantern on his arm, entered what had once been the barroom but was now converted into a men's lounging room. In cold weather this room was heated by an old-fashioned castron box stove. Chancing to look out of the windows, the proprietor recognized a party of woodsmen returning from their work in the woods to the inn, where they lodged. A look of contrition overspread the proprietor's face. "There comes those wood-choppers," he reproached himself, "probably half froze, and I ain't got any fire started yet."

With his fingers the proprietor combed his forelock thoughtfully. Suddenly his face brightened. Stepping quickly to the stove, he raised one of the lids and set the lighted lantern within. He replaced the lid and worked around to the stove. As he drew out the slide to the draft, the opposite wall immediately became illuminated with a bright, cheery glow. Seating himself comfortably the proprietor awaited his guests, who soon entered, boisterously complaining of the sudden change in the temperature.

"At-a-boy!" cried the leader enthusiastically when he saw the cheery glow. "The boss's got a peach of a fire."

The men gathered about the stove, rubbing their chilled fingers vigorously, their faces aglow with contentment as if the comfort of the room. At last they seemed to be warmed through. They left the stove for the chairs and benches that were scattered about the room and began to assemble their smoking equipment.

"You fellows all warmed up good?" affably inquired the proprietor, rising from his chair. "Because if you be," he continued, "I want 't borrow the lantern to go out and get some kindlingss 't start a fire with, and to do 't chores."

And, suiting the action to the word, he walked over to the stove, removed the lid and took out the lantern. A look of incredulous amazement overspread the faces of the woodcutters. That was quickly followed by a sheepish grin, and that, in turn, as the proprietor closed the door behind him, by a roar of indulgent laughter.

Fishy Singing.

"What a glorious voice—what a soul in her singing!" whispered the gushing lady to the bored critic sitting next to her, as the soprano on the platform gave forth her not too musical strains. And the critic answered darkly—"I thought of flounder, but soap never occurred to me."

Unchangeable Manhood.

These to the end of time shall mark the man:
 Courage to face the changing tides of life;
 The will to meet and bear his share of strife
 And wrest from it what victory he can.
 Custom and fashion may make new demands,
 But honest laughter and the cheerful smile
 Shall, to the world's last hour, remain in style,
 And men shall love the mind which understands.

The gentleman shall always gentle be
 Whatever laws the government may make,
 These things shall stand till life's last thread shall break:
 Honor, and faith and mirth and courtesy.

A thousand years from now, though life seems strange,
 He shall be loved who brothers when he can.
 A noble spirit shall proclaim the man.
 For what is truly noble cannot change.
 —Edgar A. Guest.
