Tuxis Boys Carnival The carnival held at the arena on Tuesday night under the auspices of the Tuxis Boys proved to be a popular event and there was a fairly good turn out of skaters but a notable scarcity of costumes. However what was lacking in quantity was made up in quality and those who did turn out in "regalia" made a favorable impression on the audience. Mrs. A. G. Savage, Mr. A. T. Minnis and Mr. Hoover acted as judges and awarded the prizes as follows Best old fashioned costume, E. Wall, representing a courier of the Victoria age; best old fashioned couple, Mr. Harry Murphy and Miss M. Murphy, best childrens costume first, Miss Dorothy Mason was dressed in the garb of colonial days and second Miss Marguerite Glass as a clown. Rev. A. A. Wall announced the events.

Metropolitan League Semi-Final Game Friday Night.

Aurora will have a one goal lead on the Richmond Hill hockey team when the local squad steps on the Aurora ice on Friday night in the last of the semi-final games in the Metropolitan league. With a much strengthened team Aurora won a 1-0 victory here on Wednesday night but the local fans are confident that the small lead will be more than overcome in the return game on Friday night. A special car will leave Richmond Hill at 7.30 and the return fare will be thirty cents. In three games with Aurora this year Richmond Hill has won two out of three and a real lively battle is looked for in the northern town. The winners of the round will play off with Sutton for the championship of the league.

Dickens Fellowship Will Present Play

"The Shadow of Marshalsea" a play in five acts, dramatised from Charles Dickens' "Little Dorrit" will be presented in the Masonic Hall, Richmond Hill on Saturday, March 19 by the Dickens Fellowship Players, Toronto under the auspices of the Women's Institute. The play has been presented with notable success in many of the large centres and all reports received declare it to be an exceedingly clever as well as funny production. A synopsis of the scenes is as follows:—

ACT I.—Arthur Clennam returns to London from abroad. Finds his Mother as stern and forbidding as she was when he left home twenty years before. He is stirred by his Mother's patronage of Little Dorrit, and is puzzled by this solitary departure from her grim austerity. Wonders whether it has to do with some dark secret in the life of either his Mother or Father—at which, sometime before his death, his Father had hinted.

ACT II.—Determined to fathom the mystery, Clennam follows Little Dorrit to her home, and sees her enter Marshalsea—the Debtor's Prison in London. He makes the acquaintance of "Young" John Chivery, the son of the turnkey of the Prison, and is introduced to Little Dorrit's Father who has been an inmate of the Prison for many years. Clennam offers his friendship to Little Dorrit.

ACT III.—Introduces Pancks, who has been investigating the affairs of the Dorrit family, and has discovered them to be the apparent heirs to a considerable fortune. Pancks promises Little Dorrit to tell her fortune some day. After an interview with Old Dorrit, he is confirmed in his surmises, and returns to tell Little Dorrit of her Father's early release from the prison. Finding Clennam with her, he leaves it to that gentleman to break the news instead.

ACT IV.—The Dorrits, having come into their fortune, leave the Marshalsea and go abroad.

ACT V.—Two years later. An orgy of speculation has prevailed in London; and Clennam, urged thereto by Pancks, had invested all his money in some of the schemes that were afloat. The investment was disastrous, and Clennam was left not only penniless but in debt. Being unable to liquidate his debts, he is thrown into the Marshalsea himself, and is lodged in the very room so long occupied by Old Dorrit. In the meanwhile, Old Dorrit had died, and Little Dorrit had returned to London, only to learn of Clennam's misfortune. She watches over him during an illness in the Prison, and is assisted by "Young" John Chivery in her merciful occupation. "Young John Chivery opens Clennam's eyes. Clennam and Little Dorrit. The Shadow shifts.
