OPTIMISM

This is a wondrous telescope, If you but hold it to your eyes 'Twill fill your world anew with hope, As each good thing it magnifies. If troublous times should come to you,

And all your life seem dull and grey, Just use your spy-glass wrong-end to And watch your worries fade away.

In the Spring no one needs to advise the country woman to be hopeful; just at this time of year "Optimism" is her middle name. And this is not to be wondered at. For most women in the country winter is a dreary season— a time of wet rubbers and stockings eternally drying behind the stove; of wet floors where cold little feet have tracked in the snow, of clothes freezing on the line and fingers freezing as they put them there. But we must turn the other end of the spy glass on these disageeable memories and watch them disappear.

So many pleasant things are looming up just ahead of us. The March winds rolled up all the snow blankets and April is here with her scrub pail giving the earth a grand old washing. The willow trees have put on their bright orange rain coats before the willow bushes have even taken off their furs. The maple syrup industry is in full swing and the air is filled with the songs of the birds which have come back to us over thousands of miles of land and sea.

And this is the time we plan our gardens, we all get that urge which we have inherited from our pioneer forefathers to get out and plant something, to bury seeds in the brown earth and watch the mystery of growth. Already the Marsh Marigolds are beginning to put forth tender young leaves so it can't be too early for us to put in a few sweet peas and some garden peas. Some people, fooled by the mild weather last month took a chance and planted their early garden stuff then but it hasn't been heard of since. But we are all so hopeful in the spring that we can't be pessimistic even about the weather.

This is the time when we look toward future successes in the garden line and forget all about past failures. What if the garden fence didn't keep the chickens out last year and we lost all our tomatoes? This is a brand new year and things will be quite different. Perhaps the cows spent a happy afternoon in the flower garden last summer or the pigs broke in at night and rooted up all the dahlias. Well, we will just have to see that the gates have better fastenings this year and things like that won't happen. So we go sailing along buying our seeds and planning our gardens; we come down with a bump in a new place this year but we will have had a lot of enjoyment and good wholesome exercise out of our gardens first.

But we are beginning at the wrong end of this Spring business-there is a lot of good wholesome exercise to be had at housecleaning before we can spend much time in the garden. Duty before pleasure! But there is a sort of excitement about this springtime tearing down and tearing up that appeals to the average woman. Down through the ages it has been woman's pecial privilege to fight dirt and disease. And in our own small domains we are fighting them today just as surely as we will be fighting them someday in the political arena.

At that no-far-distant time our job will be very much the same as it is now but on a larger scale-letting in the sunshine ,clearing out dark corners, giving the political rags a good airing, beating the dust out of old mouldy traditions ,throwing old laws on the scrap heap and making new ones-in short, making the world a safe and pleasant place for the men and children.
