They must be sensibly fashioned and made to give comfort to the feet of the wearer at all times. They must fit well yet give freedom to the foot muscles. They should be durable enough to promise long wear, with enough of style to satisfy the vanity of the boy who likes to feel up-to-date in dress.

A KITCHEN VICTORY

That fragrant steaming that drifts in from the kitchen is beginning now to permeate the entire house, and the wise and immediate relatives of the busy, flushed and tired housewife have not a word to say.

It is one of those expectant times, when a hush seems to settle everywhere, and nobody feels like starting the phonograph, and nobody quite dares to ask when supper will be ready.

But it is ready, after awhile, and the star number on the program is a peach cobbler. There are some peach preserves, still warm, and the members of the family silently reflect that there were sliced peaches for breakfast, a peach pie for the noon meal, and every time the baby asked for a piece between meals he was given a peach and told to run outdoors and play.

One of the great gustatory victories of the year has just been won. The peaches have been canned.

Out on the kitchen table they stand—those two dozen quarts of peaches, in a double row, handsome little soldiers, ready to be marched off to pantry or to fruit cellar. Think of winter days, when the lights will have to be lit before the evening meal!

Eye Strain

Home school work means night work for the average student, because early evening hours usually are taken up with any number of other duties.

Therefore, parents should make sure their child is not subjecting eyes to severe strain or overtaxing which in later years will collect a heavy toll. Great care should be taken by all parents to prevent injury to eyes of their children during school months.

It isn't just enough to think your child's eyes are all right. You should KNOW. The way to know is to have eyes examined by someone qualified to tell you the truth. We have always specialized on children's eye examination. And we never recommend glasses unless it be for health's sake.

Bring your child in this week.
