RIDES THREE MONTHS ON $3.00 WORTH OF GAS

From Dauphin, Manitoba, to the city of Belleville on a shaky motorcycle that has used less than three dollars worth of gasoline and oil during the whole trip, is the record of Mr. H. Freeland, who entered the city of Belleville early Friday evening with his machine, en route to Montreal, the end of a trip that was commenced three months ago.

But it is not a new invention on the machine that has been responsible for the easy consumption of oil and gas. It has been the inventive genius of the owner who, spurred by necessity and the lack of cash arranged a towing bar to the front of the motorcycle to be attached to the rear bumpers of cars on the road he has been able to coax into the job of towing him over the highways to the east.

Almost a year ago, Freeland found himself one of an army who were left stranded in the west following the finish of the harvest to which they had been lured by the promise of work. For a time he worked for a farmer. Wages were scarce, and he later even lost that job. In his travels he had picked from a rubbish heap parts of a motorcycle. With additional new parts and a side car, which he had acquired and mounted, after overhauling the machine, he stowed his gear in the side car and set out with four dollars in his pocket, for the city where his parents now live. From time to time he picked up odd jobs on the road, slept in police stations at night, and in the daytime wheeled his bike to the road and signalled for tows to the next place. At occasional garages he was lucky enough to beg enough gas to run under his own power. Once he managed to salvage a worn pair of tires that fitted his machine.

With very few exceptions, motorists whom he met on his travels through the country have been "more than kind" he said. Not many who did not stop and give him a tow, when they saw him stalled on the road. "When that happened, I simply got the towing bar out, hooked it to the rear bumper of the car, and then rode with the driver to the next stop. I believe I could go from coast to coast across the country that way without using a pint of gasoline," he said.

When last seen, Freeland was off in search of the Red Cross Hotel someone had recommended to him in Oshawa, with a meal ticket in his hand that had been given him by a reporter. His ancient motorcycle, plainly showing the signs of weary travel, stood parked forlornly in a gas station yard.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE MEETING

The grandmothers were featured contributors to the program at the regular monthly meeting of the Richmond Hill Women's Institute, held last Thursday afternoon, at the home of Mrs. Garfield Yerex, Markham Road, Richmond Hill. Among the numbers provided by the grandmothers were readings by Mrs. Jerry Smith and Mrs. I. D. Ramer, vocal duet by Mrs. William Tyndall and Mrs. F. Grainger. Other features of the program included a piano duet by the hostess, Mrs. Yerex, and Miss Lucy Yerex. Mrs. A. J. Campbell very kindly had on display a beautiful bed cover made and quilted by her mother, Mrs. Coulter. Mrs. Campbell also showed some interesting exhibits of antique brass and compared them with the wrought iron work done by the late Mr. Campbell.

Mrs. William Cook showed an old sampler, made by her grandmother, one hundred and thirty-five years ago. The work was done when her grandmother was a child of nine years and for her handiwork she was rewarded by her father with a half dozen silver spoons, which also were shown by Mrs. Cook to the Institute members.

The guest of honor at the meeting was Mrs. William Innes, a great-grandmother. The four generations of the family were present, namely Mrs. William Innes, Mrs. Harry Innes, Mrs. Bruce Innes and little Beverly Innes. On behalf of the Institute, Mrs. Plewman presented Mrs. Innes with a beautiful bouquet of roses. Mrs. Innes fittingly acknowledged the presentation.

The darning contest was won by Mrs. W. H. Snedden, the prize being a pot of daffodils.

As a means of raising money to increase the Liberal Fund, the members of the Institute are distributing some advertising literature and the co-operation of the public is asked for in their effort.

An interesting feature of the year is a prize which is offered to the one securing the largest number of new members for the Institute.
