POVERTY AND MONOPOLY

By Neil Burton They were strangers and by chance did meet. On a prosperous business street, The name of one was poverty, The others name was monopoly. "Pray Sir" said poverty "will you tell How it is you dress so well, Look so happy, spend money free And have a good time generally." Said Monopoly, "Don't you understand I own vast tracts of land, Horses, autos and a mansion great I live on the best produced in the State.

Servants I have to wait on me, What have you got friend poverty?"

"What have I got is what you ask To answer that will be no task I have nothing, only my life, Starving children and careworn wife, Who of nature's gifts you deprive The very things that keep us alive, I struggle hard to get them bread But oftentimes they go unfed, Because you monopolize the wheat The Lord provides for us to eat, Twas His intention when the world began That all should share on the equality plan, But nature's laws have been transgressed And now we suffer and are oppressed By you who a harvest reap From our blood that sells so cheap." "Tut, tut," said Monopoly, "You talk absurd, 'Tis the greatest nonsense I ever heard, Then Poverty went on to say In a quiet logical impressive way, You are protected at our expense By our various governments, Our lives to you are often sold In consideration of your gold, But there's one thing you can't control And that, sir, is our precious soul."

CARRVILLE

Yes, we did it again at Carrville. This week we had another nice increase in attendance, and a real good program too, but we still have a little more room for you. Next week we are having a citizenship program. If you like a good time at the right place, Carrville is the place, and Monday is the night. The W.A. held a Pot Luck supper at the home of Mrs. McCrone on Wednesday night of last week. About forty people sat down to the heavily laden table. After supper, progressive crockinole was played. The prize winners were, 1st Allen Morris; 2nd Mrs. W. Keffer, and Mr. Cyril Baker proudly carried off the booby prize. A very enjoyable time was spent.
