Sir John McDonald and Lady McDonald Ride on Pilot of First Train

When a small boy at school the Woodbridge Liberal scribe began the study of the world's geography. Soon after he had mastered the A, B, C's, the seed of wanderlust was sown and became deep rooted when he began the study of the Rocky Mountains, and he carried a pent-up desire to see those majestic hills from then until he had reached the voting age. It was at that time of his life that a real opportunity presented itself. Tracklaying on the Canadian Pacific Railway had been completed in the fall of 1885. The C.P.R. secured a running privilege over the Intercolonial R.R. so that when a train took the rail at Halifax on the Atlantic coast, it kept on going until it reached Port Moody, since called Vancouver, on the Pacific coast. It was on Easter Monday, April 26th, 1886, that he embarked on a train—not a scheduled one—at Toronto Union Station. It was a workman's train carrying about two hundred men bound for the Rockies in the Selkirk Range to which point they were transported for the purpose of building snow sheds to protect the track from the ravages of snow and landslides. This was the first train of any kind to take off from Toronto and run through to the Rockies. It travelled over the Ontario and Quebec line from Toronto to make connection with C.P.R. main line at Carleton Place. No section of the road was blasted as yet, and in many parts on the North Shore where the ground was low the train ran through water that reached the fire box of the engine. It was about the 20th of July, 1886, that the first schedule train to leave Halifax came through the Selkirk Range at Rogers Pass bound for the terminal at Port Moody. The snowshed at Rogers Pass was about a mile long and labourers were thick with picks, shovels and wheelbarrows excavating and preparing foundations for carpenters who did the framing. Two distinguished passengers occupied seats on the pilot of the engine as the train rumbled down the three-and-a-half percent grade, and although the event was unannounced it was soon learned that the two passengers riding on the pilot were none other than the late Sir John A. McDonald, Canada's Premier at that time, and Lady McDonald, making a coast to coast trip on the first scheduled train over the new transcontinental line. Bear in mind that the C.P.R. was just new and possessed little or no equipment when compared with the trains of palace coaches and sleeping cars of to-day.
