SOME OF THE HARDEST AND MOST EASILY GROWN
ROSES

There are many people in Canada who are fond of roses, but who hesitate to plant them as they know how much trouble some of their friends have in wintering them and in keeping them free from diseases and insects. Yet there are some roses that are very hardy and are comparatively free from these troubles, and the following are among the best tested at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa:

The Japanese rose, Rosa rugosa, is an outstanding instance. It is hardy, has glossy attractive foliage, and large single pink or white flowers, and it has a long blooming season. It becomes a large bush six feet or more in height.

There are a number of good varieties and hybrids of the Japanese rose, perhaps the most satisfactory being the F. J. Grootendorst, which bears clusters of small rosy flowers, and has a long blooming season. There is a pink variety, which is also pleasing. Others of the rugosa type are: Mme. Georges Bruant, Rose a parfum de l'Hay, Mrs. Anthony Waterer, Agnes Emily Carman. Conrad F. Meyer is good, but kills back considerably, though blooming on the new wood.

The Harrison Yellow rose is a very hardy variety, and one of the earliest to bloom. The flowers are semi-double, and golden yellow in colour. The bush reaches a height of six feet and more, and is very effective when in bloom, though its season is rather short. The Persian Yellow is somewhat like the Harrison Yellow, but is not so generally satisfactory as the other. The Agnes rose is a paler yellow than the Harrison, and has a buff tint in it at times. It is a cross between the Rosa rugosa and the Persian Yellow, and is very hardy. While the blooming season is short, because of its extreme earliness and beauty it is a very desirable rose.

A hardy attractive white rose is the one known as Madame Plantier. This is a very free bloomer, producing many medium-sized, double white flowers, and, it another white one is desired, the Old Provence rose is a good one.

The Moss roses are not as popular as they once were, but they are among the hardest roses, and have a delightful perfume. The Crested Moss and Old Pink are two of the best varieties. The Cabbage rose is an old-fashioned sweet-scented rose, which is very hardy, and well worth having in a rose garden. It needs little care and blooms profusely.

A hardy and very striking rose is the Austrian Briar. The flowers are single and of a bright reddish copper while the underside of the petals is old gold. Its season of bloom is very short. Another single rose, while not quite hardy, is Rosa hugonis, which is sulphur yellow in colour.

Then there are the many charming single varieties of the Scotch rose, Rosa spinosissima, which are quite hardy, and need little attention. Two hardy Damask roses are Lady White and Red Damask. The flowers of these are semi-double. A Canadian variety known as Betty Bland is a charming double pink, of which the wild rose, Rosa blanda, is one of the parents. The Redleaf rose, Rosa rubrifolia, is a very striking species with purplish red foliage and small single red flowers. It grows six to eight feet in height, and makes a fine background for other roses or ornamental shrubs. It is very hardy.

It will thus be seen that there is quite a variety of attractive hardy roses which can be grown with little care.
