Letters From The People

THINKS PREACHERS MUST TAKE SOME OF BLAME FOR EMPTY PEWS

Editor, The Liberal Dear Sir:

During the course of an address given recently by a Minister of the gospel, the speaker comments on the fact, that we were fast becoming a nation of non-church goers.

Admitting to some extent that the people are to blame, the question arises just what is the responsibility of the preacher himself. The writer feels that to a great extent, the modern preacher is somewhat to blame for the empty pews, with regret, see in the church to-day. After a week of battling with the economic conditions of life, the writer, weary of body, and hungry of soul, sought refuge in the house of God.

After reading of world struggles all week, speakers on the radio telling the causes and cures of our economic conditions, imagine my amazement on hearing the preacher going over the whole thing again, and I came away from the house of God a disappointed and hungry soul. Where is the old-fashioned minister who preached the gospel of Jesus Christ and him crucified? Jesus said: "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me; again we hear "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the son of man be lifted up;" and Paul in writing to the Corinthians says "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." One goes to church to receive blessing and food for the soul on the Sabbath. There are six nights a week in which the church can conduct a forum, discussing economic conditions and their relationships to religion. I have just glanced over a page of church announcements for Sunday Services, and these are some of the subjects for the Sabbath: "The Separate School Menace," "Canada and World Conditions," "The Vimy Trip," "Hepburn Beverage Rooms," "A Sunday in Old Scotia," and so it goes on, not one word about the gospel of Jesus Christ and the power of His Blood to save from Sin. The people can hear any of these other subjects, any night of the week. Why are the Mission Halls and Tabernacles packing them in, and turning hundreds away. Why? Because they are preaching the gospel of personal salvation, and nothing else. Save the soul of the employer and employee and you'll have no labor trouble, and so it goes for all classes, save the individual, and you'll save the nation. Sin, individual Sin, is the root of our troubles; and the sooner the modern preacher realizes this the better for the church of God, and the world at large; Christ always dealt with the individual need of the people. "Seek Ye First the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness. Then all these other things shall be added unto you."

Preacher, get back to the old-fashioned preaching, and the churches will fill. Sow the seed, and God will give the increase. Then where is the old-fashioned preacher who visited those inside and outside of his flock at least once every two weeks. The writer some years ago lived in the North Country, and during that time in winter, and summer, sunshine or rain, there plodded through the lonely road a minister of the gospel, who stopped at our home, for a word of cheer, and a cup of tea, who never left without a word of prayer. Denomination made no difference, sometimes it was an Anglican, or Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Salvation Army, and Roman Catholic, but all stopped to say a few words, and leave with "God bless you" upon their lips.

The writer knows of houses in this district, that a minister of the gospel has never visited. The argument advanced by the modern preacher on this angle, is that in the modern rush and bustle they haven't the time. Never was there such a fallacy. The old-time preacher had a horse and buggy, houses were many miles apart and much of the distance had to be covered on foot. The modern preacher has a car, good roads right to the door of the people, and yet they can find no time for much visitation. Salesmen are taught that success comes only through personal contact, and never was this more so than in the case of the preacher. Yes Mr. Preacher the public are partly to blame for the empty pews, but Reverend Sirs, yours is a Divine Mission and an eternal responsibility.

Yours sincerely, A Weary Soul.

"THE BOOK AGENT"

A rattling old car with a wheeze like a threshing machine swung up in the lane the other night, and it had hardly come to a shuddering stop when a sick-looking gent jumped out with a rather bulky volume under his arm.

He didn't wait for me even to make the usual remark about the weather. It appeared to me as if there was a switch on him somewhere, and when that old car stopped, then he started. He had the book out, and was flipping the pages over like a greased chain of lightning, all the while lecturing me on the positive qualities of this most remarkable new book. It sounded a good deal to me like the cure-all qualities of the old-time speller for a medicine show.

For the comparatively small sum of five dollars I could purchase the work of this authority on travel. Moonlight nights with seductive gals in the native costume.... The Taj Mahal in moonlight.... Glistening sands of the Sahara.... the foreboding, grim Sphinx.... A swarm of pilgrims in Mecca.... An authentic reproduction of a scene at Lourdes On and on he raved—beauty—travel.... a broadened enlightenment.... educate myself from the old rut of living in the country.

And when he thought he had his fish hooked, he got out a big fountain pen and a receipt book, and started to ask me such pertinent questions as my age and name and if I had five dollars in my pocket. I didn't say anything to him, but just took him out to the other side of the house, and pointed to where the sun was going down behind the Big Hill. There were little wraiths of clouds, cradled in pink and gold.... and the world had just put on the latest by Autumn.

He took it all in, and then turned to look at me. "Pretty, isn't it?" he said, and then turned back to the book, "Now about this...."

"Hold on, young fellow," I answered, "You see what the world has in my back yard. Now wouldn't I be a fool to go and stuff my head with a lot of this nonsense about Hawaii or India? Then I would get to longing that I was there and sure as shooting I would forget all about the beauty on my own place. I had a neighbor one time who made a lot of money in speculating. Now, he had the finest place around these parts, but as soon as he got this money his wife decided that she wanted to have a place just outside of the city. He bought a sort of an estate from a millionaire fellow, and the funny part was that the millionaire bought his place, because he thought it was nicer than his own."

This young chap was a likeable fellow though, and just grinned back at me, and thanked me as if I had given him a hundred dollars, and in a few minutes his old car was going lurching-split down the road and I heard it chugging up into Neighbor Higgins' place. Way down inside me, I began to feel sorry that I hadn't helped him out by buying one of his books. But that was very foolish, because the five dollars would do me more good if I was to patch the roof on the pigsty. Books are mighty fine, and I enjoy reading them, but it seems to me that we have plenty at home here to appreciate without having to go over to some foreign country.
