Live in a Town and I Like It

(By R. J. Deachman in the Financial Post)

medium and small. Now I live in a The towns are coming into their own town and like it. There are reasons The next census will reveal a simenever enamoured of the big city with | happy movement toward a better all its mechanical forces of action, life. its massed fuss, its feeble accomplishments. We should mold to our needs the place we live-but this can't be done in the city—the city fashions our lives to its own varying

In the town living costs less-one gets more for what one gives. In the cities we pay much for little. In the town we get a run for our money A lot, 100 feet wide and 200 feet deep, seems like a farm in a city. It would cost almost as much. In the town it costs relatively little and gives more joy and satisfaction. It is open to the air and the sun. Grass fruit and flowers grow better. It you doubt my statement come up and see me some time, when strawberries and raspberries are ripe, or when the new corn is ready for the pot.

Housing Costs Less Then building and maintenance cost less in the town than in the city. Taxes may be nominally high Especially of late years, but valuations are lower and that all important item of existence is not so great a burden in a town as it is in a city. Transportation costs less. Street cars and taxis are scant items of the expense account. You are closer to the sources of supply of the necessities of life, and there are ways of cutting costs which cannot be done in the larger centres. In the city you are called upon to keep up with the Jones family. Personally I don't like them. They think more of their clothes than they do of their thoughts - quite frequently I wonder if they really think. The larger the city the higher the standard of living for those who can afford it, but to the man content with a reasonable life, the higher the standard of living, the lower the standard of comfort. In the city you pay for things you do not get.

The greatest things in life are difficult to purchase with money. The list would include: breakfast alone with a morning paper, time to think, a quiet place to sleep, and friends capable of understanding. These dearest whims are always accessible in the town-not always in the city.

Then I like the way things are organized in the smaller places. They meet the needs of the people who use them. Golf fees are less because management costs little. The club house is not so elaborate. No white coated waiter serves you ardently with longing hopes for generous tips. The course is not so smooth, but your chance is as good as the other fellow's and the "greens" are all that could be desired.

Almost every town has a bowling green. The fees are low so that everyone may play.

cutive capacity who direct and encourage them and do it not for what they get but for the joy of doing something worth while - something which adds to the joy and happiness of life in town. All this serves to encourage a community spirit, a competitive enthusiasm which survives without bitterness or rancor. The human race may live without democracy-perhaps without government of and kind, but it is lost if it fails to hold its capacity to play. Victory is not everything-neither is moneythe game is the major part of life.

There is more gossip in the smaller places, but it is rarely malicious. Everybody knows if you have been to church or out of town, or under the weather. It all rises from a closer intimacy which brings a keener interest. The man in the town knows that business is better because John Smith's crop yield will be high er. In the city he measures things by curves and graphs. In the town the question is - what of the growing crops.

The farmer is close to the soil and the town is close to the farmer Mass impulses sway the city, but individual initiative begins further back. There is in our cities an intensive localism which sees nothing save that which they deem to be their own immediate interests - it's a choking influence on our national life. The city knows little of the country and cares less. It cannot be interpreted to the country nor the country to the city-one is too far from the other, but the town knows the country and the country knows the town because their interests are the same—they dwell in unity together - at least, in unity of thought.

Yes, I am glad I live in a town. But a tale without a moral is not a tale at all. Economic corcumstances modify conditions. All over the United States the movement of manufacturing industries is from the large

For years I lived in cities-large, electric power have altered conditions. why I should. Truth to tell I was lar trend in Canada-a healthing

WEDDING

FRENCH-GOODFELLOW

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Goodfellow, Bolton, when their daughter, Beatrices Olive Goodfellow, became the bride of Thomas French, son of Mrs. French and the late Robert French. The bride's sister, Mrs. Gordon Line say, of Perth, was matron of honor. The groom was assisted by his brother, Mr. Samuel French. Miss Merle Kaiser, Toronto, played the wedding march. After the reception and butfet luncheon, the bridal couple left for eastern Ontario. On their return they will reside at Bolton.

HILL-BOAKE

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John Boake, of Schomberg, was the scene of a pretty wedding when their youngest daughter, Annie May, vecame the bride of Arthur Neil Hill. second son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hill, of Nobleton. Rev. Edgar Burch. of the Presbyterian Church, King, performed the ceremony. The bride given in marriage by her father. wore a becoming costume of navy triple sheer, matching accessories and corsage of sweet peas. The attendants were Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hill of Nobleton, the latter wearing brown, matching accessories and corsage of sweet peas.

Following a reception, the bride and groom left on a motor trip for points north, and on returning will live at Nobleton.

BRANBRIDGE—CAIRNS

A quiet but very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday evening. Sept. 15, at 8 o'clock, at the manse, Timmins, when Mabel Velma Irene Cairns, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Cairns, Lloydtown, became the bride of Mr. Lawrence Brand ridge, of Timmins. Rev. Mr. Mustara of the United Church, Timmins, officiated. Mrs. Harold Westbrook, of Nobleton, was bridesmaid. Mr. Ellsworth Hamilton, of Timmins, cousing of the bride, was best man. An informal reception and supper was held at the home of the bride's auna for the immediate relatives, the supper table being decorated with roses and lily of the valley. The large four-storey wedding cake adorned the centre of the table.

Among those present were the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Cairns, Lloydtown; Mrs. Car men McLean, Jordan, and Mrs. Harold Westbrook, Nobleton, sisters of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Norman Now these things succeed in the | Cairns, Lloydtown, uncle and aunt of town because there are men of exe- the bride; Mrs. Mabel Maloney, Mr. and Mrs. Ellsworth Hamilton, Mr. Vernon Hamilton, Mr. Joseph Hamilton, Mrs. R.
